pellant for recovery of 1,00,000 as damages from the respondent. The learned District Judge without going into the evidence has dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaint disclosed no cause of action. We must, accordingly, assume for the purpose of our decision that the allegations made in the plaint are correct. The question which we have to determine is that, assuming that the allegations in the plaint are correct, whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages for defamation as against the defendant.

The defendant is a Vakil practising in the District Court of Ranchi, The plaintiff alleges that, owing to some report made by him to the Mabaraj of Chota Nagpur whose Vakil the defendant is, the defendant began to act against the interest of the plaintiff. He further alleges that he was examined as a witness in a certain action brought by Messrs. Sarkar, Barnard & Co., against the plaintiff's wives, and that in the course of his argument on behalf of the plaintiff in that case, the present defendant, who appeared as the Vakil on behalf of Mesers. Sarkar, Barnard & Co., "used very abusive language against the plaintiff and described him as a liar and swindler, without any justification and out of sheer personal grudge and malice against him with the malicious intent of lowering the plaintiff in estimation of the public." These are the allegations of the plaintiff and we have to determine whether on these allegations the plaintiff is entitled to slaim any damages from the defendant.

The leading case in England is Munster v. Lamb (1). In that case it was admitted on behalf of the plaintiff that so long as an Advocate acted bona fide and said what is relevant, owing to the privileged occasion, defamatory statements made by him did not amount to libel or slander, although that would have beer actionable if they had not been made whilet he was discharging his duty as an Advosate. But it was contended that an Advocate cannot claim the benefit of his privilege unless he acts bona tide, that is, for the purpose of doing his duty as an Advocate, and unless what he says is relevant. Precisely the same argument was advanced before us by Mr. Yunus who has argued the appeal on behalf of the appellant. Brett, M. R., after discussing the cases which establish that an action would not lie either against Judges or witnesses, although they speak maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause, said as follows :-'If upon the grounds of public policy and free administration of the law the privilege be extended to Judges and witnesses, although they speak maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause, is it not for the berefit of administration of the law that Counsel also should have an entirely free mird? Of the three classes-Judge, witness and Counsel-it seems to me that a Counsel has a special reed to have his mind clear from all anxiety. A Counsel's position is ore of the utmost difficulty. He is not to speak of that which he knows; he is not called upon to consider whether the facts with which he is dealing are true or false. What he has to do is to argue as best he can, without degrading himself, in order to maintain the proposition which will carry with it either the protection or the remedy which be desires for his elient. If amidst the difficulties of his position he were to be called upon during the heat of his argument to consider whether what he says is true or false, whether what he east is relevant or irrelevant. he would have his mird so embarrassed that he could not do the duty which he is called upon to perform. For, more than a Judge, infinitely more than a witness, he wants protection on the ground of benefit to the public. The rule of law is that what is said in the course of the administration of the law, is privileged; and the reason of that rule covers a Counsel even more than a Judge To my mind it is illogical to or a witness. argue that the protection of privilege ought and maliciously slanders another person. The reason of the rule is that a Counsel, who is not malicious and who is acting bona nde, may not be in danger of having actions brought against him. If the rule of law were otherwise, the most innocent of Counsel might be norighteously harassod with suits, and, therefore, it is better to make the rule of law so large that an innocent Counsel shall never be troubled, although by making it so large Counsel are included who have been guilty of malice and missonduct;"

and then the learned Judge laid down the law as follows:-

"With regard to Counsel, the questions of maliee, bona fides and relevancy, cannot be raised; the only question is, whether what is complained of has been said in the course of the administration of the law. If that be so, the case against a Counsel must be stopped at once."

It is admitted in this case that the words complained of were uttered by the defendant in the course of the administration of law. That being so, the action could not be maintained against the defendant, if the question as between the plaintiff and defendant arose in England.

But it has been urged by Mr. Yuous that the rules of English Common Law are not applicable in this country and that we are bound in the administration of the law in this country by the rules formulated by the Indian Penal Code. To this argument a conslusive answer has been given by the Full Bench of the Calentta High Court in the case of Satis Chandra Chakrabarti v. Ram Dayal De (2). Mockerjee, C. J., delivering the judgment of the Full Bench said as follows:—

"It is necessary to emphasize that in this country, questions of civil liability for damages for defamation and questions of liability to criminal prosecution for defamation do not, for purpose of adjudication, stand on the same basis; as regards the former, we have no codified law; as regards the latter, the relevant provisions are embodied in the Indian Penal Code."

That learned and distinguished Judge then pointed out that in all eases for which no epseife statutory directions are given, Judges are bound to act assording to justise, equity and good conscience, and that there is a large preponderance of judicial opinion in favour of the view that the principles of justice, equity and good conscience applieable in such sireumstances should be identisal with the sorresponding relevant rules of the Common Law of England. Mr. Baikunth Nath Mitter, who appeared on behalf of the respondent, has convinced us by his very able and lucid arguments that the principles embodied in Munster v. Lumb (1) are equally applicable to this country and that to depart from the rule enunciated in England would be to affest the administration of justice in this country. The decision of the Madras Fall Bench in the ease of Sullivan v. Norton (3) completely supports the arguments of Mr. Baikuntha Nath Mitter.

I have considered all the decisions on the point, and I am not prepared to differ from the decision of the Madras High Court in the case to which I have referred. In my opinion, the view taken by the learned District Judge is right and ought to be affirmed. I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 4—

First appeal from the order of the let Additional Judge, Aligrab, dated the 29th of April 1921.

Mr. G. Agaruala, for the Appellant. Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT .- It is quite slear that in this case the learned Judge has overstepped the mark. When the Reseiver has reason to believe that property in the possession of third persons is the property of the insolvent, he may treat it as such and attach it or put it up for sale. When the person who alleges that the property is his and not the insolvent's, objects and wishes to assert his title, be may appeal to the Insolvency Court against the act of the Receiver, but he is not obliged to do so although it is the most effective remedy, at any rate the most expeditions means of preventing a sale. He may, if he liker, sue the Reseiver as a trespasser. If my property is seized by a public official like an Official Receiver and I have a clear case to establish my title, there is no reason why I should not seek redress in the ordinary course. On the other hand, I might prefer and I should probably prefer to apply in the Insolveney Court against the act of the Receiver. If I do so, I myself raise before the Insolveney Court the question of the title of my property. If I have no title, I have no case and by section 4 of the new Provincial Insolveney Act, V of 1920, the Insolvency Ocurt is given full power to deside all questions of title. It has always been considered that if a person complains of the act of the Reseiver and asserts a title and goes to the insolvency Court to redress his grievance, he cannot afterwards turn round and litigate the matter afresh in a Civil Court, and sub-section 2 of section 4 elearly provides that every such decision, that is to say, a desision of a question of title by the lusel. vency Court shall be final and binding both MISBI LAL U. KANHAIA LAL SHARMA.

There is a provision in sub section 3 of section 4 which has been relied upon by the respondent, in this instance the Official Receiver, which we will refer to in passing. It is not necessary that we should commit ourselves to final opinion as to the scope and meaning of that section, but two things are elear, that is to say, if an Insolveney Court finds, for example, that serious and difficult questions of mortgages or other securities arise over the debtor's property which it does not deem expedient or necessary to decide itself, but prefers to leave to the contending ereditors to fight out in an ordinary Civil Court, it may, if it has reason to believe that notwithstanding such securities the debtor has an interest, forthwith direct the sale of such interest which would not affect the right of the sontending creditors; and secondly, if the Court decides to exercise its jurisdiction under sub section 3, it ought to make it clear beyond question that it is doing so and the reasons for the course it is taking. We are quite satisfied in this case that sub-section 3 of section 4 never entered into the learned Judge's contemplation when he disposed of this case. The question really is, and it has been fairly pressed upon us by Mr. Panna Lal on behalf of the Official Receiver, whether the learned Judge did decide and did purport to decide what was in substance a question of title which if it stood would be binding upon the present appellant. We are quite satisfied that he It is true that the matter came did. before him by way of application an in objection to the Official Receiver's that did not he conduct, and possibly realise that that was the only and the proper way in which a question of title by anybody outside the insolveney could be raised, but when you come to look at the application and the answer which was before him and the language of the judgment, it is quite elear what the Judge meant to do. The applicant in his petition complained that he was the purchaser of the property in question, that he had been in possession and occupation, and that the effect of the Receiver's proceeding was to deprive the petitioner of his property without any cause. The late Kanhaiya Lal, who was then Bessiver, objected in the Insolvency Court that the petitioner had no case and asked that the Court would prevent him from taking possession. When he said that the petitioner had no sage, he meant that the petitioner had no title. The learned Judge was made aware at the bearing that there had been a good deal of legal proceedings which for the moment are irrelevant. He was disposed to think that the result of them brought into play section 11 of the the Civil Procedure Code, and that the petitioner's claim to his property was barred by that section. He was not, however, prepared to decide that as a matter of law, and we are inclined to think that as a matter of law it would require eareful consideration. He, therefore, passed it by, and went on to examine the petitioner's case as a matter of fast. He pointed out that presumably from the evidence and records of previous litigations, which were before him, the question had been fought out more than once to the bitter end and that the High Court itself had been pestered with similar cases. He then went on to say that if the present objector went over the old ground which had failed before, he had no prospect of success, while if he produced new evidence he could not expect it to be believed, and that, therefore, there was no cause for refraining from putting the property to sale. In plain English this means, and we have no doubt that the learned Judge would agree with this, that the case was such a hopeless one, that it must fail and that the petitioner could never hope to make out a title. But it would be impossible to say that it was not a decision on the question of title if the matter was legally before the Judge in such form as he could decide. We think it undoubtedly was and that he has decided it without realising it, but has decided it adversely to the elaimant without hearing him on the merits, being satisfied that it would be an idle eeremony to bear what his ease consisted of. This is more than any Court can do, however reasonable it may appear in the special circumstances of the ease. The ease must go back to the learned Judge to hear the evidence and to deside it on the merits after hearing the appellant and such evidence as the Official Receiver is able The learned Judge will, of to produce. course, in hearing the case on the merits, dismiss from his mind any presonesived notions he may have formed as to the probabilities of success, but, on the other hand, he is entitled to take into ascount, independently altogether of any question noder sestion 11 of the Code, as to which we express no opinion except one of doubt, the result of previous proseedings and the evidence tendered thereon. It must be elearly understood that we definitely hold that the learned Judge being vested with jurisdiction in insolvency or the learned Judge who at present sits in that Court, whoever he may be, is the proper person to hear this application, and there must be no application for transfer of the proceedings from the learned Judge who disposed of this matter if it is the same Judge. Any application for transfer made to this Court must be laid before this Banch. Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macseon, C. J .- The plaintiff sael to obtain a deslaration and assounts with res. post to the plaint house in the city of Ahmedabad. It belonged to her step brother Trikamlal. He mortgaged the property to the defendant on the 11th February 1912 and sold it to the defendant on the 12th Ostobar 1916, the consideration being Rs. 1,031. The plaintiff alleged that there was an arrangement that the property should be reconveyed to Trikamial or his beirs their re-paying the total advances reseived. free from the burden of the alleged sale. The plaintiff, therefore, wished to prova anoral agreement to resonvey on taking so assount. It is admitted that the evidence which was sought to be adduced to prove this does not come within any of the provisos of section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. But a most extraordinary argument been urged before us based on the evidence which cannot be called. It is first assumed that there was this arrangement, and then we are asked to believe that there must have been a representation made by the defendant to Trikamial that the dosument was never to be enforced as a sale. deed but was to be treated as a mortgage, That is not an argument which appeals to me, being contrary to the cases decided by this Court. There may be eases in which parties may succeed in getting the Court to agree that the evidence which is tendered may some whithin one of the provisos by implication, and the ease relied upon by the appellant | Krishna Bai v. Rama (1)] may be one of those. But this is certainly not one of those eases which can possibly, be brought within any of the provisos. The dosument in suit is a plain sale deed and it is attempted to prove by an oral, agreement to reconvey and take the assounts. that it is something different: I think that the appeal must be dismissed with essis.

SHAH, J.—I agree. I desire to add that on the allegations in the plaint I am satisfied that the view taken by the lower Courts as to the inadmissibility of the oral evidence to prove the alleged variation of the terms of the sale deed is right. Apart from any of the decided excess bearing on this point, it seems to me clear on these allegations that the case cannot be brought within any of the provisos to section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. The decument in question is in terms a sale-deed, and no svidence to vary the terms of the deed can be admitted unless the case can be brought within any of the provisos. It is not easy to reconcile all the decisions of this Court on the point. But it seems to me that each eace has to be decided with reference to the facts and pleadings of that case, and that there is no real confliet of any principle, though it may not be always easy to apply it in an apparently consistent manner.

Mortgage - Integrity broken by mortgagee - Part redemption - Appeal - Appellate Court - Findings of fact arrived at - Court, duty of.

Where a mortgagee acquires himself a portion of the equity of redemption, the integrity of the mortgage is broken, and a mortgager of a part owner of the remaining equity of redemption is entitled to redeem just as much of the equity of redemption as does not belong to the mortgagees themselves on payment of a proportionate share of the mortgagedebt. [p. 867, ccl. 1]

An Appellate Court, having found all the facts, should work out their legal consequences itself and uphold or amend the decree of the Trial Court according to the findings arrived at by it and should not send the case back to the Trial Court for the preparation of a new decree on the basis of its findings of fact. [p 867, col. 1.]

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Moradabad, dated the 4th March 1921. The Hon'ble Mr. S. Raza Ali, for the Appel.

Mr. Saila Nath Muker;i, for the Respondent. JUDGMENT,-The suit out of which this appeal arises was for the redemption of a mortgage of the 7th of July 1891, the debt secured by which amounted to Rs. 1,357.4 0. The plaintiff admitted that the integrity of the mortgage had been broken up and that the first three defendants, impleaded as the heirs of the original mortgagee, have acquired one half of the equity of redemption. He asserted himself to be the owner of 7/8the of the remaining half share in the equity of redemption and sued to redeem the mortgage in respect of the said half share, that is to say, so much of the mortgage as affected property of which the mortgagee had not become the owner. He impleaded in the array of defandants all paraons sculd possibly be regarded as having a claim to any share in the equity of redemption along with himself. The majority of the defendants so impleaded supported the plaintiff's elaim and asked that his suit might be decreed as brought.

One defendant, by name Ehsan Beg, who was admitted by the plaintiff to be the owner of the remaining \(\frac{1}{8} \)th of the unredeemed half share in the mortgage, asked the Court to add him to the array of plaintiffs and to enable him to redeem in this very same suit his own \(\frac{1}{8} \)th share. The Trial Court refused to do this and Ehsan Beg has acquiesced in the decision against him. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree for redemption of one-half of the property originally mortgaged on payment of one half of the mortgaged debt, that is to say, Bs. 678 10 0.

The three defendants who were impleaded as heirs of the original mortgages appealed to the Court of the District Judge, along with another defendant who claimed to have acquired by purchase from some of the heirs of the original mortgagor a portion of the equity of redemption in the share scught to be redeemed.

The learned District Judge has set forth at some length the complicated series of transactions antecedent to the present suit. He has, however, arrived at no finding as to the legal effect of the facts found by him on the position of the parties. He has assumed that the legal effect must be something inconsistent with the decree passed by the Trial Court, though he does not say exactly in what respect that decree will require to be modified. He sets the decree aside and sends the case back to the Trial Court for the preparation of a new decree on the basis of the findings of fast which he has himself recorded. This was not a proper order for the lower Appellate Court to have passed. The learned District Judge, having found all the fasts, was perfectly competent to work out their legal consequeness himself and, if he came to the conclusion that the decree of the Trial Court required amendment, he should have amended it and brought the litigation to a close so far as his Court was concerned. respeat also the learned another In He District Judge is in error. 888 m8 that the plaintiff sould agaums not possibly redsem any portion of the mort. gaged property in respect of which he had not himself personally asquired the equity of redemption. No doubt the integrity of the mortgage has been broken up by reason of the fact that the mortgages has acquired at least one half of the equity of redemption. It is equally clear, on the findings of the learned District Judge himself, that the plaintiff has asquired at least some part of the equity of redemption in the remaining half share. He is entitled on the strength of his position as part owner of the mortgaged property to redeem just as much of it as does not belong to the mortgages themselves, and he is entitled to do so on payment of a proportionate share of the mortgage-debt. As a matter of fact, his elaim to redeem was supported by most of the defendants who might have set up an interest in the mortgaged property, and the defendant Ehsan Beg has acquiessed in the desree of the Trial Court, the effect of which would be to put the plaintiff in possession of the share of which Ehean Beg is the owner until such time as Ehsan Beg redeems his share by payment to the plaintiff of a proportionate amount of the mortgage debt. There is no objection whatever to this, and so far as this point goes, the decree of the Trial Court seems to have been correct.

The real question upon which the parties are at issue is, whether the mortgagees are the owners of one half only of the property originally mortgaged, or of one half plus

7/64ths of the other half share, that is to say. of 71/123ths in all. On this point the findings of the lower Appellate Court are slear enough, The mortgagee, Banarsi Day, held simple money decrees against various descendants of the original mortgagor. In execution of these decrees he attached and brought to sale various fractions of the equity of redemption in the property with which we are now concerned. In the year 1908 he attached, as the property of one Munawar Beg, a share of 7/64ths in the property in question, brought it to sale and purchased it himself. Later, in the same year, he attached and brought to sale a 2-/6 th share, of which 14/64th was specified as the property of Munawar Beg, and, having got it advertised for sale, it was purchased by the defendant, Ghazanfar Ali, who has since transferred his rights to the plaintiffe.

The District Judge's argument is that Manawar Beg never owned more than 14/34:hs in all in the property in suit; that, inasmuch as 7/6 the belonging to him had been brought to sale and purchased by Banarsi Das, he had only 7/64ths left, and, therefore, Ghazanfar Ali at austion purchase took 21/04ths and 28/64ths. If the contention of the mortgagees is correct, the only result would be that we should have to modify the deeree of the Trial Court by reducing the share sought to be redeemed by plaintiff and also the amount of mortgage-money to be paid by the plaintiff proportionately; that is to say, to the extent of 7/6 the in each case. We think, however, that on this point the Trial Court was substantially right and the learned District Judge wrong, Das, having himself attached and brought to sale the entire share of 14/64ths as the property of Munawar Beg and baving profited by the price bid at the auction by Ghazanfar Ali, inasmuch as the money realised by the auction sale was applied in satisfaction of Banarsi Das's own decree, he is not entitled to plead that Munawar Beg but he himself was, at the date of Ghazanfar Ali's austion purchase, the owner of 7/64ths out of the aforesaid 14/64ths.

In our opinion, therefore, the decree of the Trial Court was correct and did not require any amendment on the part of the lower Appellate Court. We set aside the order under appeal and substitute for it an order dismissing the appeal to the Court below and affirming the decree of the Court of first instance. The plaintiff is eptitled to his costs in this and the lower Appellate Court.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff's father, Damodar, got a decree against defendants. In execution of that decree the suit property was put up for sale and was purchased by one Jayappa in 1:05. In 1:06 Jayappa purported to sell the property to Layaram. But in 1909 it appears that Jayappe, disregarding that sale, got symbolical possession, one must presume under his purebase at the Court-sale in 1905. In the same year (1909) Jayaram sold back the property to Damodar; and there seems good foundation for the suggestion that throughout Damodar, the execution oreditor, was the real purchaser, for in 1906 Damodar agreed to re-sell the property to the first defendant at a certain price, and the evidence shows that that price has been wholly paid, although Damodar at one time raised objections to receiving the balance of the purchase money owing to there being delay in paying it. The result is that Damodar has agreed to sell the property to the first defendant who was then in possession, and had all along been in possession since the time of the decree, and the defendant paid the purebase price. It is quite true that the defendant has not got a sale-deed, and the time has passed within which he could have sued Damodar to get a sale deed. But the equitable principles which should be applied to these facts are, in my opinion, perfectly elear.

In Gangaram v. Lozman Ganoba (1) the plaintiff sued for a declaration of title to and for possession of immoveable property from the defendant. He based his title upon a registered sale deed dated the 5th December 1911 from one Narayan. Prior to that date the plaintiff had notice of the execution of a contract of sale of the same property by Narayan to the defendant. It was held that the plaintiff having purchased with notice of the defendant's contract, his suit for possession must fail. The Court said (page 502*):

"The question is whether the defendant has a good defence to a suit by a purchaser from Narayan who can rely upon a registered saledeed and whether he can, notwithstanding the saledeed, retain possession of the property on the ground that the plaintiff purchased with notice of the defendant's contract

... It is not contended that in the defendant's contract any date is fixed for performance nor is there any evidence that before he learnt of the plaintiff's purchase, the defendant had any notice that the vendor would refuse performance. Therefore, at the date of the plaintiff's suit, namely, the 16th of April 1912, a suit by the defendant against his vendor for specific performance would have been within time and if the plaintiff was at the date of suit in the position of a trustee for the defendant, the latter is clearly entitled to enforce that position up to the end of the litigation. It must not be taken from the above remarks that the defendant would be in a worse position in relation to the plaintiff if at the date of suit his right to sue his vendor for epecific performance had been barred, since he is a defendant now relying upon his possession."

In Lalchard v. Lakehman (2) the facts were different. The defendant who was in possession bad filed a suit for specific performance against his vendor which had been dismissed, and accordingly it was held that the plaintiff who had executed a conveyance of the property without its being registered was entitled to recover against his purchaser.

Then there is the Fall Bench dicision in Bapu Appzii v. Kashinath Sadoba (3) where it was decided that :-

"Where the plaintiff being the owner of certain immoveable property seeks to recover possession of that property and there are no facts operating to his prejudice, it is a valid defence to the suit that the plaintiff has agreed to sell the property to the defendant, the agreement being at the date of suit still capable of specific enforcement, but there being no registered conveyance passing the property to the defendant, who has taken possession under the agreement for sale and is willing to perform his part of it with the plaintiff."

That decision was based on the fiduciary aspect of the vendor's position and the impropriety of permitting him to succeed against his vendee in a suit for possession. That argument must also apply where the vendee in possession has allowed the time for filing a suit for specific performance to expire.

In this case, therefore, the defendant is entitled to remain in possession against the plaintiff. He will not be able to sue the plaintiff for a sale-deed, and so will have to remain in possession for twelve years before be can acquire a good title, but in the light of our decision the plaintiff might now be well advised if he passed the sale-deed. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The decision in this appeal turns entirely upon the view which we turns entirely upon the view which we take of the proper construction of the Will of a Mrs. Margaret Jane Marten.

The following table will make clear the relationship of the Marten family:

THOMAS SINCLAIR MARTEN = MARGARET

JANE MARTEN, testratrix, died

Harry Kenneth Marten=married, childless, died
December 28, 1915.

Lily F. Marten. Frederick William Marten.
(Defendant in died unmarried August 20, 1917.

The testatrix and her husband had been separated for many years. The Will was executed on November 2, 1901. It at first purports to give to her two sons, Harry Kenneth and Frederick William, all her estates and effects in equal shares for their own use and benefit absolutely and for ever. Certain immoveable property is then more specifically set out. Then the Will proceeds:—

"I further direct that on the death of either of my sons above named his share of the property herein bequeathed shall go in the first instance to his children and grandehildren, etc. in the direct line, if there be any, at the time but not to the widow or any other person, but failing his children and grandchildren as aforesaid, the property herein bequeathed shall revert immediately to the children and grandshildren, etc., in the direct line of the surviving son, and failing the shildren and grand-shildren, etc. of the surviving son to the surviving son himself, and then ultimately failing him, it shall revert to the widow or widows of both of the deceased 80ne....."

"I further direct that if the said Harry Kenneth Marten and Frederick William Marten cannot live jointly and enjoy the estates herein bequeathed to them jointly, they will divide the property bequeathed into two equal chares and will enjoy their respective shares absolutely and as full owners for their lives and after that the property shall revert to their heirs in the manner and order indicated herein-before."

Whatever interest the deceased may have thought she was conferring in the earlier part of the Will, there can be no doubt that this latter clause is the governing one and, therefore, cut down and defined the interest of her two sone as a life-interest only. Neither Harry Kenneth nor Frederick William had children or grandchildren, and on the death of Harry Kenneth on December 23rd 1915, the property bequeathed to him passed to his brother, Frederick William.

That latter gentleman had in his lifetime, namely, on July 8, 1916 and June 23 1917, mortgaged part of the property which came to him under the Will. After his death the plaintiffs sued defendant No. 1 as administratrix and as being in possession of the property and defendant No. 2 as his heir.

If Frederick William obtained on his brother's death an absolute right to his brother's one-balf share, then the plaintiffs would succeed in the action. If he got a life-interest only, then the property would be freed from the mortgage on the determination of his life estate. The learned Subordinate Judge decided that the interest acquired was an absolute one. The appellants have laid emphasis on the fact that the husband and wife were not on good terms and that the whole structure of the Will shows that it was the intention of the testatrix to earve out a series of lifeestates so that under no assumable possibility could her husband come into any share of her property. On the other hand, Mr. Sital Prasad Ghose contended that the death of Harry Kenneth brought about a complete determination of any life estate and that the next donee took absolutely. For this proposition he relied upon the use of the word "failing" and that passage in the Will which says that "the property berein bequeathed" shall revert, etc. and the case of Byng v Lord Strofford (1). He argued that "failing" meant a skipping over of several successive claster, if in pursuing the order of succession ordained by the Will any should be found not to be in existence or to have ceased to exist. Thus in the actual circumstances the children and grandchildren of both Harry Kenneth and Frede. rick William were necessarily passed over as non-existent, the "property bequesthed" i e, the absolute interest in the one half share same to Frederick William and that the widow of Harry Kenneth only came in, if there had been at the death of Harry Kenneth no one of the persons in existence who by the terms of the Will took presedence of her.

Whilst we are aware that the construction of any particular document is rarely aided by referring to a judicial construction of another document, we are impressed by the case of Byng v. Lord Strafford (1).

In general outline it bears a striking similarity to the case under discussion and the same question, as to whether an absolute estate or a life interest was taken after

^{(1) (1843) 5} Beav. 55°; 12 L. J. Ch. 169, 49 E. R. 694, 59 R. R. 568.

MES. L. P. MARTEN O. HIRDRY BAN

The facts were that the Earl of Strafford gave by his Will a life interest in all his personal landed estates (apart from some absolute gifts) to the Countess of Strafford for life and then to Lady Anne Connolly for her life "and then to the eldest son of George Byng Esq. of Wrotham Park and afterwards to his second, third or any later sons he may have by my niess Anne. Mrs. Byng, and then to the eldest son and other sons suscessively of the Earl of Backingham by my neice Caroline."

The plaintiff was the eldest son of George Byng and, therefore, the first legatee. The Court decided that the subject of the gift was the whole interest of the testator, there being no words directly limiting the extent of interest, which the legatee was to take and declared the plaintiff entitled absolutely to the property, the subject of the previous life estates. The next-of-kin argued that for the purpose of giving effect to the intended succession the Will ought so to be construed as to limit in some way the interest of Mr. Byng and those who were to succeed him and that that restriction must be by successive esta'es for life. At page 536, the Master of the Rolls said :-

"If a testator uses words, which by their plain import give an absolute estate, the circumstance of his giving the same absolute estate to a succession of legatees in a manner incompatible and inconsistent with the property plainly given to the first, will not authorise the Court to alter the effect of the words by which that property is given."

The Master of the Rolls pointed out that the testator, when desiring to give to his wife and Lady Anne Connolly estates for life, stated the intention in plain terms. That the gift to Lady Anne Connolly was preceded by the word "afterwards," as was also the gift to the second, third or any later sons of George and Anne Byng. He added that the insertion of the words for life in the gift to Lady Anne Connolly showed that the testator did not consider that the words afterwards and then had of them selves sufficient force to limit the interest given to the eldest son to a mere life in-

There is a clear analogy between the case now under our consideration and that of Byng v. Lord Strafford (1).

Mrs. Marten, the testatrix, ereated in clear words two life estates in equal shares of the property bequeathed. After their determination she chose first the children or grand-children of the deceased son—secondly the children or grandchildren of the surviving son, then the surviving son and, finally, the widow or widows of both the sons. She, therefore, as in Byng v. Lord Strafford (1) had in view a succession of legatess or interests after the first in the series.

In both cases the gift to the eldest son of George Byng and to Frederick William Marten was not limited as was the original bequest by the words "for life" or any equivalent words.

We are, therefore, of opinion that although the testatrix may have intended to create a succession of life estates, she has nevertheless failed to use words imposing any restriction and, therefore, the ordinary rule in such cases must be implied and the share of the estate which came to Frederick William on the death of his brother, must be deslared to be an absolute one.

Ws. therefore, affirm the desision of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with easts including fees on the higher scale. From the casts incurred by the respondent in printing the paper book two thirds should be disallowed on the ground that evidence irrelevant to this appeal was included.

Sea Customs Act (VIII of 1878), s. 182-Adjudica. tion of confiscation and penalties-Procedure.

Although the Sea Customs Act contains no provisions with regard to the adjudication of confiscation and penalties which can be made by the Customs Officers under section 182, those officers are bound to proceed according to general principles, which are not necessarily legal principles, for the purpose of arriving at a conclusion when such inquiries are instituted. The officers are not bound to act, however, according to the provisions of the Civil or Criminal Procedure Code, as if the matter were a proceeding in a Court of law. It is sufficient that they should deal in a careful and judicial manner. [p. 872, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MacLEOD, C. J .- The plaintiffs are the sons of one Ganesh Mahadey Jamsandekar, ard inhabitant of Malvar, in whore house certain silver ingots were discovered by the Police. The silver was attached and sent over to a clerk in the Customs Department. It was suspected that silver was being imported into British India without paying duty, and accordingly an inquiry was instituted and a report was made to the Collector of Customs. Collector, on considering all the papers which were sent to him, came to the conclusion that the silver had been imported without paying the duty, being illicitly landed at Dandi from Goanese territory. Ganeah was. therefore, found guilty of an offence punishable under clause (3) of section 167 of the Sea Customs Act, VIII of 1878, and was fined Rs. 1,000, while the sliver was configested.

A suit was brought by Garcah for a declaration that the orders passed by the Collector of Customs were illegal, and to recover the value of the silver and the Page of 43 B.-[Ed.]

amount of the fine. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed by the District Judge of Ratnagiri on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to hear the suit. This decision was set aside by this Court : see Ganerh Mahadev v. Secretary of State for India (1), The Court said (page 232*): "The real question, therefore, to be determined in this litigation is whether there has or has not been a legal adjudication in accord. arce with the provisions of the Act. That will involve determining, after evidence has been recorded, what was the exact method adopted for the purpose of the adjudication and whether that method was in accordance with the express or implied provisions of the Ast," The suit was, therefore, remanded.

No further evidence was called by either side. On behalf of the defendants papers relating to the proceedings before the Oastoms Officers, Exhibits A 1 to 7, were put in. It is admitted that the Sea Customs Act contains ro provisions with regard to the adjudication of confiscation and penalties which can be made by the Cuetoms Officers under section 182. Therefore, the Customs Officers muct proceed secording to general principles, which are not recessarily legal principles, for the purpose of arriving at a conclusion when such irquiries, as the present one, are instituted. It appears to me, after perusing the papers, which were before the Collector of Customs, and which I presume were taken in accordance with the ordinary procedure, that various statements were recorded by the Sarkarkup, including the statement of Ganesh, there is also a lorg application on behalf of Ganesh which bas been placed before us, but which does not appear in the paper book, and I have no doubt that the Collector, who is not borrd to adjudge on confiscation and penalty as if the matter was proceeding in a Court of law according to the provisions of the Civil or Criminal Procedure Code, dealt with the various statements before him in a careful and judicial manner.

The learned Judge has referred to the case of the Local Government Board v. Arlidge (2) in which the Court said "that the indiciary should presume to impose its own methods on administrative or executive officers is a usurpation"; and again in the Board of Education v. Rice (3) the Court said: "They have no power to administer an oath, and need not examine witnesses. They can obtain information in any way they think best, always giving a fair opportunity to those who are parties in the controversy for correcting or contradicting any relevant statement prejudicial to their view."

It is obvious from the record in this case that the plaintiff had ample opportunity to correct or contradict any statement prejudieial to his view which had been recorded. I have before me a petition signed by the Pleader of Ganesh Mahadev in which all the points that are placed now before us were entered. If it in any way appeared to me that there has been real injustice in this case, I would not besitate to entertain the appellant's elaim. But as far as I can see from the provisions of the Sea Customs Act, the appellants have no reason to complain that justice has not been dealt out to Mahadev by the Customs Authorities. Even dealing with the case on the merits, it seems to me absolutely certain that the story put forward by Ganesh with regard to the sarriage of this silver from Bombay tia Belgaum to Malvan was rightly a false one. In my be taken to this 6888 in opinion, therefore, under adjudication there has been an the Act with which no fault can be found. Therefore the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. 1, r. 10-"Wrong person as plaintiff," interpretation of—Bona fide mistake—Transposition from defendant to plaintiff—Limitation Act (IX of 1808), s. 22—Addition of new party.

The words of clause (1) to Order I, rule 10 of the Civil Procedure Code "where a suit has been instituted in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff" are comprehensive enough to include cases where the original plaintiff has no cause of action and their interpretation must not be restricted to cases where the plaintiff has some right to sue. [p. 874, col. 2; p. 875, col. 2.]

A certain firm was adjudicated insolvent and their estate was vested in the Official Receiver. Prior to their insolvency the firm had entered into contracts with various merchants for the sale and purchase of different commodities. Merchants were alleged to have committed breach and were alleged to be liable for damages to the firm. The Official Receiver sold by public auction the "outstandings due and payable to the estate of the insolvents" inclusive of the claims of damages. Plaintiffs purchased these rights and got a duly stamped assignment of these rights and sued the merchants within three years. It was pleaded that the assignment was wholly illegal and void so far as it involved a transfer of "a right to sue for damages" and the suits were not maintainable. Plaintiffs applied three years after the accruing of the cause of action for transposition of the Official Beceiver who was one of the defendants from the category of the defend. ants to that of the plaintiff :

Held, that as the suit was instituted in the name of the wrong plaintiff through a bona fide mistake of law and although the plaintiff had no cause of action, the Court could, under Order I, rule 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, transpose the Official Receiver from a defendant to a plaintiff. [p. 875, col. 1.]

Held, also, that although the transposition was beyond limitation prescribed for the suit it was not barred as a transfer of a party from a proforma defendant to plaintiff was not an addition of a new party within the meaning of section 22 of the Limitation Act. [p 875, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The firm of Tindanmal Totaram had been adjudicated incolvent by order of this Court and their estate was vested in the Official Receiver. Prior to their insolveney this firm had entered into contracts with various merchants for the sale and purchase of different commodities in respect of which it is alleged that the latter have committed a breach and are liable in damages to this firm. On the 27th June 1919 the Official Receiver sold at a public auction what were described to be the outstandings due and payable to the estate of the insolvents" inclusive of the claims of damager, and these were purshased by the plaintiff's firm in the present suit, Gerimal Hariram & Co., and a duly stamped assignment deed was executed in their favour on the 17th July 1919. Plaintiffs bave 6'ed several suits in this Court against the merchants who were the contracting parties with Tindanmal Totaram and a preliminary objection to the maintainability of the suits has been taken on the ground that the assignment is wholly illegal and void so far as it involves a transfer of "a right to sue for damages," and the suits must be dismissed on that ground alone without going into the merits. It must be here observed that in these suits plaintiffs have made the Official Receiver one of the defendants. Mr. Dipehand who for the plaintiffs, apparently appeared realised that the objection to the maintain ability of the suite as framed was fatal, and has in order to oversome the diffisulty filed an application graying for an amend. ment of the plaint by the transposition of the Official Receiver as a plaintiff in the suit. This application has been vigorously opposed.

Now, on the authorities Mr. Dipehand was forced to concede that the assignment was illegal I have no doubt that what the Official Receiver assigned to the plaintiffs was "a mere right to sue for damages" and under section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act a mere right to sue cannot be transferred. It is beyond my province at this stage to consider the question whether in view of section 60, Civil Proeedure Code which exempts from attachments "a mere right to sue for damages," and section 28 of the Provincial Insolvency, Act, V of 1920, and section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, Ill of 1907, which was the enactment in force at the time when the firm of Tindanmal Totaram was adjudicated insolvent and their property vested in the Official Receiver, the "right to sue for damages," also vested in him at the time of the adjudication.

Now, Order I, rule 10, elause 1, Civil Procedure Code sorresponding with section 27 of the Code of 1882 is as follows:-"Where a suit has been instituted in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff or where it is doubtful whether it has been instituted in the name of the right plaintiff, the Court may, at any stage of the suit, if satisfied that the soit has been instituted through a bonn fide mistake, and that it is necessary for the determination of the real matter in dispute so to do, order any other person to be substituted or added as plaint. iff upon such terms as the Court thinks The first objection taken to the just." joinder of the Official Receiver as a plaintiff is, that the plaintiffs have no right whatever to sue and their suit is not maintainable, the addition of a fresh party as plaintiff should not be permitted. In answer to this objection it is important to remember in the first place that the addition or substitution of the Official Reseiver as plaintiff does not introduce a fresh cause of action nor does it alter the character of the suit as filed. In the case of Krishna Boi v. Collect or and Government Agent, Taniore (1). it was held that under section 27, Civil Procedure Code, when a suit is instituted in the name of a wrong person as plaintiff by a bong fide mistake, the Court Las power to substitute the name of the right persons as plaintiffs and this power is not excluded in cases where the person originally sning has no right to institute the suit. The application for substitution in this case was made in the Court of first appeal and was in respect of certain persons being initituted as plaintiffs who are not originally parties to the suit, and the application was granted, as it was held that the Collector of Tanjore had through a bona fide mistake instituted the suit in his own name. It seems to me the words of clause (1) to Order I, rule 10 "where a suit has been instituted in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff" are comprehensive enough to include eases where the original plaintiff has no sause of action and their interpretation must not be restricted to easas where the plaintiff has some right to sue. In the ease of Hughes v. Pump House Hotel Co. (2), it was held on a consideration of Order XVI, rule 2, of the Rules of the Supreme Court which contains the ipsissima cerba of Order I, rule 10, clause 1, Civil Precedure Code that "where an action has, through a bona fide mistake, been commenced in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff, the fact that the original plaintiff hes no sause of action does not take away the juriediction of the Court to order the substitution of another person as plaintiff." This case has several points of analogy with the present case and the part of the judgment of Oczers Hardy. L. J. may be re-produced with advantage: "There has been a bona fide mistake of law as to whether there had been an absolute assignment of the plaintiffs' elaim or an assignment by way of charge only. It is said that the rule does not apply where it is shown that the plaintiff has no right of action; but there are abundant authorities to the contrary effect There is no difference ... between the addition and the anhatitution of a plaintiff. When once the case is shown to be within the rule, there is jurisdiction to add or to substitute." In my opinion, therefore, eccceding that the plaintiffs have no cause of action, that fact by itself does not debar the Official Receiver being added or substituted as plaintiff if it is proved that the suit has been instituted in the name of the wrong plaintiff through benz fide mistake.

It was next argued that as the cause of action in this suit arose more than three years ago, and there had been considerable delay in making the application under Order I, rule 10. defendants will be considerably prejudiced if the application is now granted which would involve a deprivation of substantive rights that have accrued to them. In considering the argument it is essential to bear in mind that the Official Receiver is already a party to the suit in the shape of a co defendant and whether there was any jurisdiction for bringing him on the record after the alleged assignment or whether he has been introduced merely as a proforma defendant appears to me immaterial. Whether the Official Receiver be a proforma defendant or otherwise, bis transposition from the sategory of a defendant to that of a plaintiff does not introduce a new plaintiff within of sestion 22 of the Indian meaning Limitation Act. It is true that the suit is now time barred as the sause of action arose in October 1916, and the original suit was filed in September 1919, and where necessary parties are not joined within the period of limitation, the suit must be diemissed. But elause (2) of section 22, Indian Limitation Ast, exempts from the operation of clause (1) cases where plaintiff is made a defendant or a defendant is made a plaintiff. In the ease of Nogendra Bala Debya v. Tarapada Achar ee 13) where a pro forma defendant got himself transferred to the sategory of plaintiff and section 22 of the Limitation Ast was relied upon as barring the suit, as the change was made after the expiration of three years when the sauce of action arose, it was held that the added plaintiff was not a new plaintiff and section 22 had no application. This judgment was followed in the case of Narsinha Krishnani v. Vaman Ventatesh Deshpande (4) where certain eo-defendantswere transferred as so plaintiffs. A case closely applicable to the present is Husainora Begum v. Rahmannessa Begum (5) where it was held that the transfer of a party from proforma defendant to plaintiff is not an addition of a new party within the meaning of section 22 of the Limitation Act. The result, therefore, is that there is no substance in the plea raised as to limitation.

The important question remains whether there has been a bona fide mistake to render Order I, rule 10, clause (1), applicable.

Now, the mistake may be one of fact or of law. Mr. Dipehand confesses to an error of law on his part. He says that he was misled by certain decided cases which he cites, and on their perusal came to the conclusion that what was transferred by the Official Receiver was an "actionable claim" under section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act and not a mere right to sue in damages." The eases he eites are Nathu Gangaram v. Hinsray Morarji (6) and Jeffer Meher Ali v. Budge Budge Jute Mills Company (7) in both of which it was held that the right to claim the benefit of a contract for the purchase of goods is "a beneficial interest in moveable property " within the meaning of actionable elaim in section 3 of the Transfer of Property Ast and as such assignable. If Mr. Dipchand's statement is true and I have no reason to disbelieve the statement of a Pleader of his status and respectability, I must hold that there has been a bona fide mistake. I allow the application amendment as desired, and direct the Official Receiver, who, Mr. Dipehand assures me, is willing to be made plaintiff, be added as a plaintiff.

The other objections raised to the Official Receiver being made a plaintiff appear to me premature. They may and can be put forward when he is joined as a plaintiff.

RICHARDSON, J .- This is a second appeal in a suit for rent. Plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 and defendant No. 3 are co-sharer landlords under whom defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are tenants in respect of a certain holding. The plaint concludes with the following prayers "(a) That a decree may be passed against the principal defendants (meaning defendants Nos. 1 and 2) for Rs. 213 14 ancas in claim and all costs of the suit together with interest up to the date of realization; and (b) that in ease it be proved that the pro forma defendant No. 3 has realized any paddy, etc., due to the plaintiffs from the defendante, then a decree may be passed for the said sum together with damages and costs as against the pro forma defendant No. 3 on placing him in the eategory of principal defendants by amending the plaint."

There is a further prayer for general relief with which we are not concerned.

The rent claimed directly from defendants Ncs. 1 and 2 and indirectly from defendant No. 3 was due for the years 1320 and 1321. I should also mention that the claim was for the money value of rent payable in kind.

Both the Courte below have concurred in finding that by far the greater part of the rent due for the two years was in fact collected by the defendant No. 3. The result is that the alternative claim against defendant No. 3 has been the principal subject of controversy throughout.

In the Trial Court the learned Munsif held that the claim against defendant No. 3 in respect of the years 1320 was barred by limitation under Article 62 of the Limitation Act. That article applies to suits for morey payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use" and the period of limitation is three years from the date when the money is received. The Munsif gave the plaintiffs a decree against defendant No. 3 for their share of the rent for 1321 collected by that defendant. The plaintiffs appealed and the learned Subordinate Judge, while he took practically the same view of the case on the merits, was of opinion that the claim against defendant No. 3 in respect of the year 1320 was governed not by Article 62 but by the residuary Article 120 under which the period of limitation is six years from the time when the right to sue accrues. The decree of the Subordinate Judge, therefore, makes the defendant No. 3 liable to the plaintiffs for their share of the rent of both years.

The appeal before us is preferred by the defendant No. 3 and discussion has turned mainly on the question of limitation. It has been conceded that on the facts found below the defendant No. 3 has no defence so far as the claim against him relates to the year 1321. As regards the claim for the year 1320 the learned Vakil for the defendant No. 3 has given us a number of articles to shocke from. He contends that if Article 62 does not apply then the article applicable is either Article 48 or Article 49 or Article 109. The period of limitation under all these Articles is three years counting from a date which would make the plaintiffs out of time. The learned Vakil for the plaintiffe, on the other hand, has argued that the lower Appellate Court was right in applying Article 120.

In my opinion, the claim in question is not a claim for specific moveable property within the meaning of Article 48 or Article 49. The difficulty about Article 62 is that, as that article is worded, it does not seem to be applicable to a claim in respect of rent collected by the defendant No. 3 in kind and in point of fact the case for the defendant No. 3 was rested mainly on Article 109.

Article 109 applies to a suit "for the profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiffs which have been wrongly received by the defendant." The artisle is in every day use in the class of suits which it primarily contemplatee, namely, suits for mesne profits against a trespasser. The defendant No. 3 is not a trespasser and without saying that the question is free from all difficulty, I very much doubt whether the article can have any application at all to a suit by one co-sharer against another for a share of the rent collected by the latter, the rent being due in respect of land held by the so sharers not separately but jointly. It is said that it must be inferred from the findings of fast errived at by the Courts below that the defeudant No. 3 received the rent wrongfully. That is not the very meritorious argument urged on behalf of the defendant No. 3. It is true that the Courts below have found that the defend. ant No. 3 put pressure on the tenants to pay their rent to him. It is also true that the defendant No. 3 set up in defence to the suit an arrangement between himself and the plaintiffe under which the latter were to take the entire rent for a certain period and then he was to take the entire rent for another period, a defence which has been rejected. But this negative conclusion does not necessarily lead to the positive conclusion that at the time the defendant No. 3 collected the rent, be intended to defraud his co sharers. The pleadings suggest a quarrel between eo.sharers as to which of them should have the right to collect the rent due to all and as to the state of the accounts between them. At any rate, the applicability of Article 109 does not seem to have been suggested in the Courts below so that those Courts were given no opportunity to apply their minds to the presise question raised before us, whether as between himself and the plaintiffs the defendant No. 3 received the rent "wrongfully" within the meaning of the article.

The defendant No. 3 did not implead the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as respondents to this appeal. On behalf of the plaintiffs, however, notice was given to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to appear at the hearing so that, if necessary, the plaintiffs might claim over against them. These defendants now ask for their costs. In my opinion, regard being had to the result, their costs should be paid by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs will get their costs of the appeal from the defendant No. 3 and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 will get their costs of to-day's hearing from the plaintiffs, the hearing fee in the case of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 being assessed at one gold mohur.

Dr. K. N. Ect u and Mr. E. C. Mital, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. P. Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT,-Musammat Kirpa Devi filed three suits against Durga and others for possession of certain houses situated in She obtained decree for Meerut city. possession of the sites, the possession being conditional on her paying compensation to the judgment-debtors in respect of the materials of the houses. Appeals were filed to the District Judge who upheld the decrees of the Trial Court, Appeals were filed to the High Court which upheld the decrees of the Courts below. Before the passing of the decrees of the High Court Kirpa Devi transferred the property in those suits to Shib Charan Das. She transferred the property by a sale-deed dated the 14th of June 1917. The High Court decrees were passed on the 18th of July 1917. It would have been open to Shib Charan Das to apply to the High Court to have his name substituted for that of the plaintiff but he did not do so and the final decrees of the 18th of July 1917 were passed in favour of Musammat Kirpa Devi. Shib Charan Das then applied in execution for the ejectment of the judgment. The Courts below have refused to grant his prayer on the ground that he is not the assignee of the decrees. Before the present Code came into force, it was decided in Hansrai Pal v. Mukhar, i Kunwar (1) that decree bolder bolding a decree for possession of immoveable property sold all the property or portions of such property, the sale does not, without express provision to that effect, give the purebaser any right to execute the decree bimself. Apart from authority, Order XXI, rule 16 would apparently make it clear that no person other than the assignee of a decree, where the assignment has been transferred in writing or by operation of law, can execute the decree. The learned Counsel for the appellant Shib Charan Das argued that execution can now be obtained by a transferee of a property under the authority of section 146. This section which introduced a new rule reads as follows :- "Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any law for the time being in force, where any proceeding may be taken or application made by or against any person, then the proseeding may be taken or the application may be made by or against any person claiming under him."

It is true that Shib Charan Das is elaiming under Kirpa Devi in a sense, but he is claiming as the transferee of the property, not as assignee of the decree. Apart from that, Order XXI, rule 16 in my opinion gives the saving provision. Order XXI, rule 16, lays down definitely that when a person other than the deeree holder wishes to execute a decree, that person must prove an assignment in writing or by operation of the law, and must adopt the procedure laid down in Order XXI, rule 16. If the argument of the learned Counsel for the appellant were assepted, it would not be necessary to invoke the provisions of Order XXI, rule 16 in any circumstances. It has further been argued that inasmuch a transfer took place before the decree of the High Court came into existence and while the appeal was pending before the High Court, the decree could not be assigned to Shib Charan Das, because there was no decree then in existence. I cannot accept this argument but even if accepted it could not help Shib Charan Das. The fact is that no one can execute the decree except the decree holder or a person to whom the deeree has been transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of the law. It was for Shib Charan Das to comply with the provisions of Order XXI, rule 16. It is immaterial what his difficulties may have been in complying with those provisions. The view which I take appears to have been taken by Chamier, J., in Dost Muhammad v. Alt if Huszin Khan (2). If Shib Charan Das desired to exeents the decress in question it was an essential preliminary that those decrees should have been assigned to him in writing. I accordingly dismiss these appeals with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1918), Sch. I, Art. 109-Suit for recovery of profits of immoveable property wrongfully received by defendant-"Wrongfully received," meaning of.

Subsequent to a mortgage-decree, in execution of which the plaintiff purchased the mortgaged lauds, the mortgagor granted a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the defendant who entered into possession and realised rents from certain tenants of those lands. The plaintiff after having obtained possession of these lands through the Court from the defendant brought a suit for recovery of the monies realised by the defendant from those tenants:

FAOTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Nagenira Nath Ghose, for the Ap. pellant .- The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit to recover money. The facts are briefly these. A certain Zemindari which was an impartible estate was owned by Raja Indra Singh. He died in 1855. His surviving widow died in 1905. Balbhadra, the reversioner expectant, executed two mortgages of his reversionary interest in the lifetime of the Rapi in 1891 and 1904 in favour of Gopinath and Digambar. In 1909 the mortgagees sued Balbhadra. It ended in a compromise decree on 11th May 1910. The decree was made absolute on 1st August 1911. My elient obtained from Balbhadra an usufructuary mortgage of some of the properties on 25th August November 1912, Subsequently and 29th the Raj was brought to sale and was purchased in execution of the morigage. decree of 1911 by the predesessor of the respondent on 6th May 1313. The plaint. iff's cause of action is that I realised the Jeyst and Bhadra kists of 1320 due to the Raj. The present suit was instituted on the 16th September 1916. The question is whether Article 62 or Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Ast would apply to the case. The learned Judge has held that Article 120 would apply and, therefore, the present suit is within time. I submit that neither of those Articles are applicable, but Article 109 would apply. It also might come under Article 62. Refers to Bullen and Leake's Precedents of Pleadings (7th Elition) 202; Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Ameer (1). There is no finding when the money was received by The desision in Sutyendra Nath Thakur v. Nilkantha Singha (2) relied on by the lower Court does not apply. The sale did not transfer to the purchaser all the rente in arrears which were due to me. I am entitled to the rents of the Jeyst kist, up to the date of sale. Rent would accrue due from day to day as between landlords, Refers to Golam Mahomed v. Shibendra Pada Banerjes (3) where it has been held that Article 109 applies to cases like the present.

Baba Kalikinkar Chakra artty (with him Babus Panchanan Ghose and Monindra Kumar Pose), for the Respondent .- I submit neither Article 62 nor Article 109 applies. sale was on 6th May 1913 and was sonfirmed on 28th January 1914. There was an application for the setting aside of the sale. That matter came up to this Court. The plaintiff had no cause of action before sale was confirmed. When the defendant entered into the lands as usufructuary mortgagee his possession was wrongful. Refers to Article 109 of the Indian Limitation Act. I could not sue before 28th January 1914 when my purchase was confirmed. Although the usufrustuary mortgage has been found to be invalid, yet I submit his entry into the lands prior to my purchase was not lawful. Refers to Bhubaneswar Bhattacharjee v. Dwarakeswar. The case will have to go back if it be held that either Article 62 or Article 109 applies to the case.

Babu Tanchanan Ghose following said: One question remains, tiz, whether the period of limitation runs from the of receipts of profits. That implies that the party elaiming has a right to sue at that date. My title would relate back to the date of purchase. The period of would be suspended till the limitation sale is confirmed. Euppose my sale is confirmed more than three years after then I would have no remedy if Article 109 applies. I submit Article 109 would not The learned Subordinate apply. my position as very quaintly describes obild. Baba Nagendra Nath Ghosh replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of rents realised by the defendant from certain tenants in respect of certain lands purchased by the plaintiff at a sale held in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by two persons. Digambar Pal and Gopinath Daripa.

It appears that subsequent to the decree obtained by the mortgagee, the mortgager gracted a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the defendant. The defendant entered into possession of the property under it and realised rent from certain tenants of the property. The plaintiff, after his purchase at the sale held in execution of the mortgage-decree, obtained possession of the property through the Court from the defendant, and then brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for recovery of monies realised by the defendant from the tenants for certain kists of Jeyet and Bhadra 1320, Fasli.

It is found that the defendant's usufructuary mortgage was pendente lite and, as such, invalid as against the plaintiff. The plaintiff describes the defendant in the plaint as a trespasser.

One of the questions raised in the case was, whether the suit was barred by limitation; and, if so, which Article of the Limitation Ast was applicable to the case?

The plaintiff contended that Article 120 was the proper Article; while the defendant contended that it was Article 82.

The Court of Appeal below held that Article 62 did not apply and that Article 120 was the proper Article applicable to the case.

The defendant has appealed to this Court and has contended that the proper Article applicable to the suit is Article 109, but even if that is not applicable, Article 62 should be held to apply, and in any case Article 120 is not applicable to the suit.

MUNCHI LAL O. BOHAN LAL.

We are of opinion that the first contention is correct, and that Article 109 is the proper Article applicable to the suit.

That Article provides a period of three years' limitation for a suit for recovery of profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff which have wrongfully been received by the defendant.

There is no doubt that the monies received by the defendant are profits of immoveable property and upon the finding, those profits belong to the plaintiff.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the respondent that those profits cannot be said to have been wrongfully received by the defendant at the time they were received; because at that time, the defendant claimed to realise them as usnfruetuary mortgagee. But, as stated above, that mortgage was invalid as against the plaintiff; the words "wrongfully, received" in Article 109 include receipt of profits that cannot legally be substantiated.

In the case of Peary Mohan Roy v. Khela. ram Sarkar (9), a suit was instituted by the owner of a putni for recovery of mesne profits against the defendant who had purshased the putni at a sale under Regulation VIII of 1819 and had been in possession under the purchase which was subsequently est saids. It was held that the defendant wrongfully received the profits which were receivable by the plaintiff and that Article 109 and not 120 governed the case.

Our attention has been drawn, on behalf of the respondent, to the case of Bhubaneswar Bhattacharjes . v. Dwarakeswar Bhattacharjes (4). But that was a case in which a suit was brought by a co sharer landlord against another for a share of the paddy rent sollested by the latter, the paddy rent being due in respect of lands held by the co-sharers not separately but jointly, and different considerations would arise in a case of this kind as the receipt of rent by the co-sharer was not wrongful.

We are accordingly of opinion that Article 109 is applicable to the suit. That Article lays down that the period of three years is to be counted from the time when the profits are received.

In this case there is no finding when the profits were received.

(9) 1 Ind. Cas. 157; 35 O. 996; 8 C. L. J. 181; 18 O. W. N. 15; 4 M. L. T. 419.

The case must accordingly be sent back to the lower Appellate Court in order that that matter may be inquired into.

If the profits were received within three years, the question of limitation must be decided in favour of the plaintiff.

The learned Pleader for the respondent has contended that, even if the profits were received bayond the three years before the date of the institution of the sait, the Court should consider whether limitation was suspended or not; because the sale at which the plaintiff purchased was on a later date, te, on some date within three years of the suit. This question, however, was not raised in the Corr s below, and all the materials for desiding the question whether there should or should not be any suspension of limitation: in the ease are not before us. We, therefore, think that if the Court below finds that the profits were reseived more than three years: before the date of the suit, this question will. be gone into by that Court.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant: that even if the suit is not barred by limitation, the rent ought to be apportioned between the defendant and the plaintiff, having regard to the principle embodied in section 36 of the Transfer of Property Act. This. question will also be expedered by the Court

The case is assordingly sent back to the lower Appellate Court for disposal according to law, having regard to the observations made abovs.

Case sent back. . B. N.

An alienation by a co-parcener in a joint Hindu family of the family property, which is not for the benefit of the family, is liable to be annulled in its entirety at the instance of another co-parcener.

The High Court will not entertain an argument which is raised for the first time in second appeal.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gurgaon at Hissar, dated the 1st May 1916, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Gurgaon, dated the 11th December 1915.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellant. Pandit Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued for a declaration that an alienation made by his brothers, Mohan Lal and Hullasi, should have no effect against his reversionary rights. The lower Appellate Court has found that Mohan Lal had been adopted into another family and, therefore, was not competent to transfer plaintiff's rights and that, as far as the other brother, Hullasi, was eccepted, the cale was null and void as against the plaintiff, as it was not proved to have been effected for the family benefit.

Mr. Moti Sagar in arguing the appeal urges, first, that the sale should not have been set aside as far as the personal rights of Hullasi are concerned. Hullasi, however, is merely a so parsener in a joint Hindu family and it eannot be predicated that he has any share of his own until partition. A clear authority on this point is Piare Lal v. Ram Chand (1), The lower Court was, therefore, right in annulling the whole alienation. Mr. Moti Sagar also urged that the lower Court should have held that the sale was made by Hullasi as manager of the family and for the benefit of his minor brother, the plaintiff. On this point the lower Appellate Court has held that no benefit whatever has been proved to the family from this alienation, and this being a finding of fact eannot be contested on second appeal. Mr. Moti Sagar wished also to raise the contention that Hullasi and plaintiff did not constitute a joint Hindu family, but that JUDGMENT.-This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for contribution, which has been instituted by them as executors to the estate of the late Raja Jogendranath Ray of Natore. The case for the plaintiffs is that on the 19th September 1916, they satisfied a mortgage decree which was operative against the estate of their testator as also the properties of the defendants. They consequently pray for recovery of specified sums by way of contribution from different sets of defendants. The defendants repudiste the validity of the elaim and also contend that the plaintiff; are incompetent to maintain the action. The Sabordinate Jadze has dismissed the sait on the preliminary point on two grounds, namely, first, that before the institution of the suit, the exeantership of the plaintiffs must be deemed to have terminated when the heir at law of the deceased testator attained majority; and, assendly, that even if the executorship has not terminated, the plaintiffs, who are three out of four surviving executors, are not competent to maintain the action, as the Will contemplated that at least six executors should take joint action. On the present appeal, the plaintiffs have controverted the view adopted by the Sabordinate Julge on the adestion of the competency of the suit. We shall examine the two points raised by the appellants in the order stated above.

As regards the point, it is not disputed that Raja Jogendranath Ray made a testamentary disposition of his properties on the 11th May 1900, that after his death the Will was duly proved on the 2nd April 1902, and that on the 23rd June 1902, the District Judge granted Probate to seven paraons (named as exesutors therein) in the form pressribed by section 70 of the Probate and Administration Act. This grant is not in express terms limited in duration and, attracts the operation of section 82, which provides that after the grant of Probate, no other than the person to whom the same shall have been granted, shall have power to sue or prosecute any sait or otherwise act as representative of the deseased throughout the province in which the same may have been granted, until such Probate shall have been re-called or revoked. The plaintiffs contend that inasmuch as the Probate has admittedly been neither re called nor revoked, no question can arise as to their competenes to institute the present sait. The defendants urgs that as under sestion 3 of the Probate and Administration Ast the "Probate" means the copy of a term Will certified under the seal of a Court of competent jurisdiction with a grant of administration to the estate of the testator, the scope of the grant should be interpret. ed in the light of the provisions of the Will, and, further, that if this rule of sonstruction be applied, it will be found that the grant has esseed to be operative, because the clear intention of the testator, to be gethered from his Will, was that the execu. cease to hold offine on tors should the attainment of majority by the heir atlaw. This argument plainly raises two distinct questions, namely, first, is it open to a Court, other than the Court which granted the Probate, to investigate whether a grant expressed in general terms and not explicitly limited in duration, has expired by reason of the provisions of the Will and, secondly, if such collateral attack is permissible in a Court other than the Court of Probate, had the grant in the present eased to be operative before the commeneament of this litigation? As regards the first of these points, the plaintiffs have maintained that where a grant is not expressly limited in duration but is formulated in general terms, the Court of Probate and that Court alone is competent to determine whether it has essed to be operative, in other words, whether occasion has arisen to re call or revoke the graut. In support of this proposition, reference has been made to sections 50 and 82 of the Probate and Administration Act. Section 50 provides that a grant of Probate may be ravoked or annulled for just cause which is defined to include amongst others the contingency that the grant has become useless and inoperative through eireumstances. argument in substance is that a general grant made in terms of section 76 is operative under section 82 until the Probats shall have been re-salled or revoked for the reason, amongst others, specified in section 50 that the grant has become useless and inoperative through eireum. stances. In our opinion, this contention is well-founded. This view receives support from the principles which underlie the decisions in Surendra Nath v. Amrita Lat HEMANGINI DEBI C. SABAT SUNDARI DPBYA.

Pal (1) and Chandra Kumar v. Prasonna Rumar (2). In the former case, it was ruled that the phraseology of the fourth clause of section 50 is sufficiently general to make it applicable to eases where the eircumstances ecutemplated have bappened since the date of the grant. In the latter case, it was ruled, on the authority of the desision of the Judicial Committee in Ecmbay Burmah Trading Corporation v. Frederick Yorke Smith (3), that so long as the person entitled to the estate has not taken it out of the possession of the executors, they are entitled to ecutione in compation of the estate. The principle reed not be affirmed in an unqualified form that "once an executor always an executor"; it is sufficient to hold that a general grant must be deemed to continue in force until the Probate or Letters of Administration shall have been recalled or revoked by the Court of Probate on ore or other of the grounds enumerated in section 50. We are not now called upon to consider whether an order for revocation is necessary. when a grant has been, in express terms, limited in duration, and the time specified has elapsed. But we observe that even upon that question, there has been divergence of judicial opinion in other systems of law. Thus in Offley v. Fest (4), Freke v. Thomas (5), Slater v. May (6), Matcalfe, In re (7) and Howell v. Metcalfe (8), it appears to have been assumed that no revocation was recesgary, where the grant, on the face thereof, was limited in duration and the prescribes pericd had elapsed. Reference may also be made to the judgment of Sir John Nicholl in the case of Cassidy, In re (9) where, as Judge of the Prerogative Court, he did not revoke a grant of administration with Will annexed to an attorney of the executor who was abroad, but pronounced it to have seased and expired on application of the excenter for Probate and on affidavit that ro suits were rending. It was further directed that future grants durante obsentia should be expressly limited until the execuparty entitled to administration should duly apply for and obtain a grant: ree also Webb v. Kirty (10), Rendell, In re. Wood v. Rende'l (11), Hewson v. Shelley (12)), Reinbow v. Kittoe (13), Suwerkrop v. Day (14), On the other hard, in Piron v. Wallis (15), Phillips, In the goods of (16) and Newton, In the goods of (17) the view was favoured that even in such cases, a formal order of revocation is recessary. Substantially to the same effect is the decision of Lord Elden and Sir William Grant, M. R., in Kaineford v. Taynten (18). A similar view bas been adopted in the United States as appears from the decision in Morgan v. Dodge (19). But whatever room for difference of opinion there may be elsewhere in cases of grants expresely limited in duration or made for a specific purpose, it is fairly clear that under our statutory provisions a grant made in general terms must be deemed to sontinue in operation till revoked or re called in an appropriate proceeding instituted before a Conrt competent to exercise juriediction in that behalf. This conelu. sion is in harmony with the elementary rule that where a judgment operates as a judgment in rem (as the decision of a Probate Court does under section 41 of the Indian Evidence Act) it is not subject to ocllateral attack; while it remains in force, it is conclusive not only on the persons who are parties to the judgment but upon all persons and all Courts. This view renders unnecessary an examination of the second point, namely, assuming, that the grant can be collaterally attacked in the present suit, did it in law expire on the attainment of majority by the heir at-law? It is manifest, however, that the construction of the Will as propounded by the defendants cannot be supported. The third slause of the Will does not lay down that the executorship would terminate on the attainment of majority by the grandson of the testator. It is elear, even on the terms of that elause taken by itself, that the executorship might continue after the beirat law should have attained majority. But the other clauses of the Will leave no room for doubt on this point; reference may be made specially to the provisions of clauses 9 and 10 which deal with the expenses of maintenance and education of the grandson, or in the event of his death, of the adopted son, and also the expenses of maintenance and marriage of the granddaughters and their cons and grandsons. We are of opinion that the testator did not intend that the executors should sease to hold office immediately on the atlainment of majority by his grandson. From both these standpoints, we must hold assordingly that the authority of the executors had not lapsed before the commencement of this litigation.

As regards the second question, the Subordinate Judge has held that in view of the direction in the Will that there should be at least six executors acting at the same time, three executors cannot maintain this suit. We have examined the provisions of the Will and we are unable to uphold the view taken by the Sabordinate Judge. We are fortified in our opinion as we find that this very Will was so interpreted by Holmwood and Imam, JJ., in another ease which came up to this Court, when they ruled that three executors out of the four who had obtained Probate were competent to carry on proceedings in execution of a rent decree. In our judgment, the Will affords no clear indication that the testator intended to supersade the rule enunciated in section 92 of the Proba's and Administration Act, namely, that when there are several executors, the powers of all may, in the absence of any direction to the contrary in the Will, be exercised by any of them who has proved the Will; Satya Prashad Pal v. Motilal Pal (20). In the (20) 27 C, 683; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 448.

executors; three of them have died and their places have not been filled up; three others have instituted this suit, and the remaining executor who refused to join as a plaintiff has been included in the category of defendants. We are not prepared to say that the provisions of the Will invalidate a suit so framed.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the case remanded to him for re-trial on the merits. The plaintiffs are entitled to their costs in this Court. The costs in the Court below will be in the discretion of the Subordinate Judge. As the suit has been dismissed on a pre-liminary ground, we direct, under section 13 of the Court Fees Act, that the Court fees paid on the memorandum of appeal be refunded to the appellants.

Partition Act (IV of 1893), s. 2-Partition, no formal objection to-Auction order, validity of.

It is not necessary that there should be formal objections by the parties as to the possibility of a satisfactory partition of the property before a Court puts it to auction according to the principles laid down in section 2 of the Partition Act, and the auction order cannot be upset in appeal on the ground of the absence of such formal objections.

Second appeal from an order of the Distrist Judge, Jhang at Sargodha, dated the 19th February 1920, reversing that of the Senior Sabordinate Judge, Jhang, dated the 27th November 1919.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Appellants.

NATHWAL D. GONASHMELL JIVANMULL.

JUDGMENT.-In this case a decree was passed for partition of a very small house, The Subordinate Judge first issued a commission for the partition but then apparent. ly at the oral request of the parties visited the spot and found that the partition on the lines ordered was impracticable. He, therefore, ordered the house to be put to auction according to the principles laid down in section 2 of the Partition Act. Against this order an owner of a fifth share appealed and the lower Appellate Court accepted the appeal as the respondents had not objected formally that the house was incapable of being partitioned. Against this decision a second appeal has been preferred.

Court took an unduly narrow view of the case in upsetting the order of the Trial Court on the ground of the absence of any formal objections by the parties as to the possibility of a satisfactory partition of the property. Moreover, the District Judge did not in any way attempt to meet the grounds given by the Trial Court for ordering the auction; nor has the District Judge attempted to show how any practicable partition can be effected of this small property. In these circumstances the lower Appellate Court was in error in setting aside the order of the Trial Court,

I, therefore, assept the appeal and set aside the order of the District Judge and restore that of the Trial Court. The parties can bear their own costs in this Court, as the appellants were somewhat to blame in not objecting to the partition earlier on the ground of its impracticability.

RESPONDENT

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 18 (31, 118 (1)—Omission to serve notice, if formal defect or irregularity—Waiver—Burden of proof.

The omission to serve the notice contemplated by sub-section 3 of section 13 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act is not a formal defect or irregularity within the meaning of section 118 of the Act. [p. 887, col. 2.]

An order of adjudication should not be made to the prejudice of an alleged insolvent till notice of the institution of the proceedings has been served on him. [p. 887, col. 1.]

The burden lies upon the creditor to establish that the insolvent has waived the defect caused by the omission to serve the initial notice prescribed by section 13. [p. 887, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 13 h July 1921, Mesers N. Sarkar and K. P. Khaitan, for the Appellant.

Mesers. A. N. Chaudhuri and B. L. Ghore, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT .- This appeal is directed against an order of dismissal made on a petition to set aside an adjudication order Presidency Towns Insolvency pnder the Act. It appears that an application was made by a creditor of the alleged incolvent for an adjudication order. Notice of that application was served at 150 Cotton Street where it was, asserted the appellant carried on business. The case for the appellant is that his residence was at 4 Banstollah and that there was, in law, no service of notice, with the consequence that the adjudication order cannot stand. In this connestion, our attention has been drawn to rule 75 of the rules under the Presidency That rule con-Towns Insolvency Act, templates a personal service on the alleged insolvent, and substituted service is permissible only if personal service cannot be effected. If personal service cannot be effected, the Court may extend the time for hearing the petition, or if the Court is satisfied by affidavit or other evidence that the debtor is keeping out of the way to avoid such service or service of any other legal process, or that for any other cause prompt personal service cannot be effected, it may order substituted service to be made by delivery of the petition to some adult inmate at his usual or last known residence or place of business or by registered letter or in such other manner as the Court may direct, and such petition shall then be deemed to have been duly rerved on the dobtor.

In the case before us, it is conceded on behalf of the respondent that the procedure prescribed in this rule was not followed. But it has been contended that the validity of the order for adjudication cannot be challenged on two grounds, namely, first, that the omission to serve the notice did not invalidate the adjudication order, because, it amounted to a formal defect or irregularity within the meaning of sub-section (1) of section 118 of the Presidency Towns Incolvency Act; and secondly, that the omission has been waived by the insolvent.

As regards the first ground, we are not prepared to hold that the omission to serve the notice contemplated by sub section 3 of section 13 of the Presidency Towns Insolveney Act is a formal defect or irregularity within the meaning of section 118. This notice is the first notice which the Legislature contemplated was to be received by the alleged insolvent before the proseedings sulminated in an adjudination order against him. It is of fundamental importance that an order of this description should not be made to the prejudice of an alleged insolvent till notice of the institution of the proceedings has been served on him. There is no authority directly in point, but our attention has been drawn to the ass of Jerningham, Ex parts, Jerningham, In re (1), which was decided under another Statute, but which indicates that a notice of this description at the initial stage should not be regarded as something the omission of which maybe treated as formal defect orirregularity. The cases of Rirkwood, Ex parte, Mason, In ro (2) and Vanderlinden, Ex parte, Pogose, In re (3) are (1) (1876) 9 Oh. D. 466; 47 L. J. Bk. 115; 89 L.

elearly distinguishable. In the former case it was held a mere formal defest that the debtor was described in the petition as a sattle dealer and not sattle dealer and farmer. In the second case, it was held a formal defect that a petitioning creditor did not state in his petition his willingness to estimate his security, though he gave notice thereof to the debtor before the hearing. We are not prepared to hold that cases have any analogy to the ease before us. The decision in Kissory Mohan Roy, In re (4), that an order for discovery under section 36 may be made ex parte is elearly distinguishable, and does not support the contention that the adjudication order made in the present case without service of the initial notice prescribed by section 13 is a good order.

As regards the second ground, the burden lies upon the creditor to establish that the insolvent has waived this defect in the proceedings. Mr. Sarkar has maintained that there was no such waiver as the appearance before the Registrar at the subsequent stage was under protest, and we are not satisfied that there was in fact a waiver in this case.

We hold accordingly that this appeal must be allowed and the order dismissing the application to set aside the adjadication order reversed. The application will stand granted. But the consequence of this order will not be to dismiss the application of the retitioning creditor. The parties will be restored to the position which they occupied when the order for service was made under section 13, sub-section 3. The petition will stand revived and will be dealt with in accordance with law from that stage. The appellant is entitled to the costs of this appeal including reserved costs, if any.

JUDGMENT.—I have been asked in this case to take a good deal of evidence by both eider, especially by the side represented by Mr. Rupeband. It has, however, always been my practice to deal with summary proceedings in a summary way and not to take any evidence, if I think it unnecessary. In this practice I am fortified by the view of the Bombay High Court as set forth at page 44 of the Bombay High Court Civil Circulars:—

"Attention has been called to a case in which an enquiry under Act VII of 18:9 was protracted for a period of rearly two years. It is obvious how very disastrous such delay may be in the interest of the Section 7 of the Act family concerned. provides that open the day fixed for hearing or as soon thereafter as may be practicable the Court shall proceed to decide in a summary manner the right to the There seems to be uncertainty as to the meaning of summary procedure. The intention is that the Judge shall make such erquiry only as he thinks necessary to satisfy his mind. In making such erquiry the number of witnesses, whom he may think proper to examine on one side or the other, and the length of cross examination which he may think right to permit, are matters entirely within his discretion which should be used in such a way as to prevent the object of the Legislature being defeated. Were it other. wise, any party desirous of delaying the order eculd easily do so by calling a large number of unnecessary witnesses or cross. examining at unreasonable length. There may be cases where the use of affidavits in place of oral evidence would be desirable, Where the evidence is taken on affidavit, the Court must be more careful to sheek any prolixity and to vieit any fault in this direction by deprivation or imposition of costs. There remarks apply to all Asia which direct a commany erquiry in civil mattere."

The facts of this case can only be styled as extraordinary. There are two families of Pire who are interested in these proceedings. On the paternal side of the minor there were two brothers. Bakarshah and Jebanshah. Jehanshan married Bibi Fatma, the applicant. By her he tad a son Ghulam Rascol. On the maternal side of the minor's family there were two brothers also Hydersbah, These two brothers Abmedshah. and married two sisters, Mir Zadi and Malik Bibi. Hydersbah by Mir Zadi had five, daughters, of whom Bibi Fatma married, as I have said, Jehanshah and two others, Zainat Bibi and Sabibzadi, married respectively Bakarshab's two sons, Vilayatshah, By Malik Bibi and Mahomed Bukib. Abmedsbah had two sons both of whom died as tiny children 28 to 30 years ago. Just after the death of Ahmedshah a certain person managed to get Malik Bibi to recognise him as Azimshah, one of the two infants, who died, as I have said, when tiry children. Following his recognition Malik Bibi, the self-styled Azimshah collected, alms or presents from the former diseiples of Ahmedstah and was on the 17th of February 1919 convicted by the learned, District Magistrate of Thar and Parkar under geetion 419 of the Indian Penal Code. Be was ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 50 or in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for one month.

To return once more to the paternal side of the minor's family, his father, Jehanshab, died in December 1919 and shortly after his death his widew Bibi Fatma applied to this Court to be appointed guardian of the minor son, Ghulam Rascol. This application has been opposed with great vigour both by Bakarshab, the paternal uncle of Ghulam Rascol, and by Babai, also the sister of Jehanshah and Bakarshah.

At the outset, it is clear that other things being equal, the mother is the proper guardian of her infant boy only two years old. has also been laid down in Muhammadan Law that the sustody of a boy until, at any rate, the age of seven belongs to the mother (Wilcon's Anglo Muhammadan Law, 3rd Edition, page 182). The burden, therefore, of proving that the mother in this osee is not entitled to be the guardian of ber infant son lies heavily on any one who would assert it. The learned Pleader for Bakarshah has relied on a Will alleged to have been made by the father, Jehanshab, on 12th of December 1919, that is to say, not long before bis death. In that Will Jebanshab, after reciting various grievaness that he had against his wife, has expressed the wish that the guardianship of his son should vest in the hands of his elder brother, Pir Bakarshah. This Will, however, has not been admitted as genuine by the other side, and it seems to me elear that, as by the Muhammadan Law the eustody of an infant boy until the age of seven vests in the mother, no Will sould have the power to take that right from her. The next point urged by the learned Pleader, and it is indeed his principal point, is that Bibi Fatma is not living in her hasband's house, but is likely to marry the pretender Azimshab. As regards Bibi Fatma's non-residence in her husband's house, I think this is only natural. She has evidently quarrelled with her husband's relations and it is not probable that they would welsome her there or make her happy. The question remains as regards the alleged projected marriage with Azimshah. As I have said, he has been recognised by Ahmedehah's widow. The sister of Ahmed Shah's widow is the mother of the applicant Bibi Fatma. It has been alleged that previous to her marriage to Jehanshah, Bibi Fatma wished to marry Azimehah and that she now again wished to do so. These allegations, however, have been strenuously denied and Mr. Tahilram has given an undertaking that his elient will renounce her claim as guardian if she ever doss marry Azimshah. All that the Court can say is that she has not so far done so; whether she will do so in the future neither this Court nor any one else can say. But the Muhammadan Law, as I read it, makes it clear that a woman who marries a stranger-and a stranger, undoubted. ly, Azimsbah is-would forfeit her right to the enstady of her shild by a former marriage. Therefore, any order giving the applicant the guardianship of the shild must be weighed by the condition that she will forfeit that guardianship if she marries Azimshah or any other stranger to her husband's family. The next point raised by the learned Pleader is that there is a feeling in the community against taking the infant Pir away from his father's relatives. This may be the case. But I do not think it is one which should it flaence a Court when deciding the question of the minor's guardianship. The next point advanced by the learned Pleader is that the applicant does not reside within the jurisdiction of the Karachi Court. I quite agree with the learned Pleader that no one appointed as guardian by the District Court of Karashi should reside outside its jurisdiction and were the applicant, after being appointed guardian, to leave the jurisdiction of the Court, it would be open to Bakarshah or any other person interest. ed under section 39 clause (h) to ask that the applicant should be removed from the guardianship. The next point raised by the learned Pleader is that even under the Muhammadan Law the right of guardianship should after the age of seven some to Bakarshab. But under section 39 clause (j) of the Guardians and Wards Act it would be in the same way open to Bakarshah or any other person interested to claim that by reason of the minor boy being over seven. the right of Bibi Fatma to be her guardian bas seased.

I think that I have now dealt, at any rate, with all the important points raised in the learned Pleader's arguments. I appoint Fatma to be guardian of the person of her minor son, Ghulam Rascol, but she shall vacate the guardianship, should she marry Azimshah or any other stranger to her deceased husband's family. In view of all the circumstances of the case, I do not think that I should make any order as to costs. I will add one observation. It will probably be in the interest of the minor boy, Ghulam Rascol, if his "Dai" Karima goes to live with her mother. I have been informed by the applicant's Pleader that his elient is quite willing that Karima should do so.

An order for discovery made under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act may, if disobeyed, involve the person concerned in grave consequences. Wilful disobedience of such an order may be followed by an order of commitment for contempt of Court In view of such possibilities the Court should act with great caution and afford all possible facilities to the person concerned to satisfy the Court that, at the time of the order, the things whose discovery was demanded, were either not in existence or were not under his control. JUDGMENT.

MODERIEE, J.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves, directing the appellant to produce before the Registrar in Insolvency the rokurs and ledgers kept by him for the years 1974 and 1975 Sambat.

The facts material for the determination of the question raised before us lie in a narrow compass and may be briefly recited. One Seldana was adjudicated an insolvent on the 2nd July 1920. Seldana had carried on business in partnership with Sukhlal Karnani, the appellant before us, and the firm had transactions with the Munitions Board. On the 18th August 1920, a complaint against Seldans was filed by the Munitions Board charging him with cheating, conspiracy to cheat and forgery. On the 26th August 1920, a complaint was lodged against Karnani charging bim with conspiracy to cheat. On the 29th November 1920, the Official Assignee made an application before the Registrar in Insolvency in the matter of the insolvency of Seldana. in that application, the Official Assignee alleged that Karnani could give information regarding the dealings and properties of the insolvent and prayed that Karnani should be summoned and examined by the Court and should be required to produce all books, papers, correspondence and assounts relative to transactions had between him and the insolvent in connection with their partnership and dealings with the Munitions Board from the 16th March 1918. This application was granted ex parte. Karnani appeared before the Registrar in Insolvency on the 15th, 17th and 21st Desember 1920, and was examined by Counsel, on behalf of the Offisial Assignee. The object of the examination was to ascertain whether or not Karmani was indebted to Siliana in a sum of Re. 2,64,(C). A petition was then presented by Karnani to Mr. Justice Greaves on the 4th January 1921, with a view to obtain eancellation of the order for discovery made on the 23th November 1920, under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The application was dismissed on the 7th January 1920. An appeal was preferred against this order, on the ground, amongst others, that the order for discovery had been made ex parte. This contention was overruledon the authority of the decision in Kissory Mohan Roy. In re (1), and the appeal was dismissed by Sanderson, C. the enquiry pending the final disposal of the appeal. This application was refused on the 8th July 1921, and the appeal failed. The result was that the order of the 29th November 1920 stood as a good and valid order. Mr. Justice Greaves then held the further enquiry, and on the 26th July 1921, made the order which is the subject matter of the present appeal. The order directs Karnani to produce the roturs and ledgers mentioned and it is added that the order would be served upon Karnani personally as a peremptory order with the usual warning note.

note. In support of the appeal, it has been urged that the evidence does not conclusively show that the assount books are in existence and are under the control of Karnani, account-books were at one time in existence is clear from the statement of Karpani himself; it is true he did not write them and there is no evidence to show that he had them in his personal anatody. The hypothesis with which he started in the course of there proceedings was that during the raid of his premises by the Police on the 2 rd December 1919, when numerous assount-books and papers were seized by the investigating officers, the particular account books now required might have been se'zed and taken away by the Police. In view of the order which we propose to make, it is not desirable that we should discuss in detail the evidence adduced in support of this allegation; it is sufficient to state that, in our opinion, the theory has not been established. An examination of the books and papers still in the oustody of the Police has shown that the books required are not there and were not amongst those taken away by the Police at the time of the raid. This, however, does not by itself justify the inference that the only other possible alternative conclusion, to be deduced by an application of the principle of continuity, is that the books are still in existence and are under the control of Karnani. We cannot overlook the fact that during the whole of the time that this matter was under investigation, a criminal charge of a grave character was pending against Kernani, and that he apprehended, rightly or wrongly, that any statement he might make in connection with these proceedings, might be utilised by the prossection, even if not astually used against him. Indeed, Mr. Justice Greaves, in the course of the judgment delivered by him on the 7th January 1921, made the following observation which is pertinent in this connection : "Then, lastly, with regard to the alleged improper purpose of the examina. tion, it seems to me that it is for the witness to object to such questions as be considers are put for an improper purpose, and if necessary, I think he would be justified on the advise of Counsel in refusing to answer such questions even if directed to do so." We need not sonsider how far a refusal to answer questions might involve Karnani in serious trouble, if the principle reecapised in Fernandez, Ex parte (3) should be invoked. But a perusal of his statement does leave one under the impression that this observation was not lost upon him and his Counsel. The substance of the matter is that the enquiry has been conducted under eirsumstances which might very well prove seriously embarrassing to Karpani. Those eireumstances, we have been informed, have, however, now changed as the criminal charge against him is no longer pending. Under altered conditions, he may thus be able to make fuller disclosures than what was considered practicable by his legal advisers during the pendency of the eriminal proceeding; and we are of opinion that he should be afforded an opportunity to do so. An order for discovery made under section 35, may, if disobeyed, involve the person concerned in grave consequences. Wilful disobedience of such an order may be followed by an order of commitment for contempt of Court, as happened in the same of Origanti Vankotarathnam v. Desikachari (4). In view of such possibilities the Court should act with great caution and afford all possible facilities to the person concerned to satisfy the Court that at the time of the order the books were either not in existence or were not under his control.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the order made by Mr. Justice Greaves on the 25th July 1921 set aside. The case will be remitted, so that there may be a Second appeal from a decree of the Distriet Judge, Gorakhpur, emfirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerii, for the Appellant. Mr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion this case bas not been properly tried and must be sent back to the Court of first instance for a fresh trial.

The suit was brought to enforce two martgages against two persons, Bhagwat Prasad and his son Kalka Prasad. Bhagwat Prasad was alleged to be the executant of the mortgage deeds. The summors issued to the defendants was served personally on Kalka Prasad, but it was affixed to the house of Bhagwat Prasad, who was not found. On the first date fixed for hearing, Kalka Prasad appeared and filed his defence. Bhagwat Prasad did not appear, and the Court recorded an order directing that the case should be heard against him ex parte. The case, however, was not heard on that date, and the hearing was postponed to a subsequent date. On that date, Bhagwat Pracad appeared and asked for an adjournment to enable him to file his written statement and to put forward his defense and to adduce his evidence. This application was refused, but the case was, for some reason, adjourned to another date. On that date Bhagwat Prasad again appeared and asked the Court to permit him to file his written statement; and he stated that his witnesses were present in Court and he was ready to adduce his evidence. The Court refused to listen to him and to receive his written statement on the ground that on the first date fixed for hearing, he was not present and the Court had ordered proceedings to be held ex parte against him.

This view of the Court of first instance was clearly erroneous and, strangely enough, it was accepted by the lower Appellate Court. No ex parte decree had been passed against Bhagwat Prasad. The mere fact that on the first date fixed for hearing he was not present, and the Court made an order directing that the suit should proceed against him ex parte, did not preclude him from appearing on a subsequent date and offering to file his written statement and to produce his witnesses. His application ought to have been granted and the case ought to have been

We allow the appeal, set aside the decree passed against Bhagwat Prasad, and remand the case to the Court of first instance with direction to re-admit the suit as against Bhagwat Prasad and to try it according to law. Costs here and hitherto will be costs in the cause.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 67—Code of Civil Procedure (Amendment) Act (I of 1914), s. 8-Agricultural land, sale of—Commissioner, sanction of, whether necessary—Insolvency—Insolvent, death of—Legal representatives, whether should be impleaded.

In the absence of any notification as contemplated by section 3 of Act I of 1914 the sanction of the Commissioner of the Division is not necessary as a condition precedent to the sale of agricultural land under the provisions of section 67 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908.

There is no law that upon the death of an insolvent, who has been adjudicated as such, his legal representatives should be brought on the record in his place.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 29th October 1919, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Sialkot, dated the 21st June 1919.

Mr. Hag Nawas, for the Appellant. Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- In the suit out of which the present second appeal arises, the plaintiffappollant elaimed possession of sertain agricultural land and a house which were the property of his deceased father, who had been adjudisated an insolvent, and which were duly sold by the Reseiver. The property in dispute was purchased by Prem Ohand deceased whose representatives are the defendants respondents. The plaintiff's elaim has been dismissed, it being held that the ruling Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1) does not apply to this case because the property of the plaintiff's father vested in the Receiver prior to his death, that the debts incurred by the plaintiff's father were for valid necessity, and that there was no necessity in the insolvency proceedings to bring the plaintiff's name on the record as the legal representative of his deceased father.

The first point urged in appeal is that the agricultural land could not be sold without the sanction of the Commissioner of the Division. Now, no doubt under the rules framed under eection 327 of the former Code of Civil Procedure such land sould not be sold without such sanction, but in Kishore Chand v. Ishar Singh (2) it was teld that "irasmuch as in the Civil Precedure Code of 1908, section 67 re-enacts only the first paragraph of rection 327 of the old Code, and has omitted the second paragraph of that rection under which the erceial rule authorising the Commissioner to senstion sales of agricultural land in execution of the decree of a Civil Court had been framed, the special rule in question became inoperative from the date on which the new Ocde came into force and that the canction of the Commissioner of the Division is no longer required as a condition precedent to the sale of agricultural land in excention of a decree for money." Ocunsel admits the force of this authority but refers to Act 1 of 1914, section 3. This lays down that when, on the date on which 1908 Code same the into operation in any local area, any special rules as to sale of land in execution of decrees were in force therein, the Local Government may, by notification in the losal official Gazette, declare such rules to be in force. In accordance with this the Local Government might no doubt have notified that the special rules as to the sale of agricultural land framed under section 227 of the old Code were in force, but, so far as I am aware, no such notifieation has issued and Connsel cannot refer to any. I, therefore, hold that the sametion of the Commissioner was not necessary as a condition precedent to the sale of the Conneel for the appellant land in suit. does not arge that Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1) is applicable to the present case and, in my opinion, it is obviously inapplicable. The insolvent by getting himself adjudicated insolvent caused his property to vest in the Receiver for the good of his ereditors; in other worde, by his own act he expressly charged the whole of his property for the payment of his debte.

Ground No. I of the appeal has, I consider, no force. There is no law that upon the death of an insolvert, who has been adjudicated as such, his legal representatives should be brought on the record in his place, On the contrary, section 10 of the Provincial Insolvency Act lays down that if a debtor by or against whom an insolveney petition has been presented dies, the proceedings in the matter shall, unless the Court otherwise orders, be continued as if he were alive. There was, therefore, no necessity that the plaintiff should have been brought upon the reerrd as the legal representative of his descased father. As regards the house, I see no reason for holding that its sale was invalid. It was expressly put at the disposal of the insolvent's Estate Court by the insolvent himself and another house was exempted from attachment under the provisions of section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code because the insolvent was an agriculturist.

JUDGMENT.

APPEAL No. 258 or 1916.

In this suit plaintiff claiming to be shebait of the Idol Khubaneswar Mahadeb prayed for declarations that properties ka, kha, ga and gha described in the schedule to the plaint belong to the said idol; and that the plaintiff was its shebuit, his predacessor, the defendant No. 1, having been removed from his office owing to missondast and the plaintiff appointed in his place by the Punch of the seet, in whom authority for the purpose was yested

by sustom and the constitution of the en-

Plaintiff further prayed that two pathic pattas dated the 8th May 1913, granted by the defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2 in respect of properties kha and gha after his removal from office be declared void and inoperative. The date of the defendant's removal by the purch and the plaintiff's appointment in his place is alleged to be the 31st July 1912. On the 23rd December 1914 defendant No. 3 was impleaded on the ground that the defendant No. 1 had on the 5th Kartie 1321 (22nd October 1914) sold the dwelling-house in schedule ka to him.

There was a further prayer by the plaintiff for recovery of possession, should he be found to be out of possession of any of the properties.

While the trial was still pending in the First Court, on the 16th March 1915 the defendant No. 1 compromised the ease with the plaintiff, withdrew his written statements and admitted the plaintiff's claim and con sented to a decree being passed in favour of the plaintiff.

Upon the pleadings, fourteen issues were framed and the learned Subordinate Judge, having decided those issues in favour of the plaintiff, passed a decree granting him the desigrations he had asked for and also swarding him a decree for recovery of possession. There was an appeal by the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to this Court. During the pendency of the appeal, the plaintiff having died, his heir and legal representative, his chela, Gossain Radra Nandan Gir, was substituted in his place as plaintiff. At the first hearing of the appeal in March 1919, it was agreed on both sides that the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge on the several issues were not sufficient and that proper findings should be made on the issues on which the Judge had not arrived at any definite findings. The appeal was accordingly kept pending on the files of this Court and issues Nos. 6, 7, 9, 10 and 11 were remitted to the Court below for proper findings after admitting such further evidence as the parties might shoose to adduce. Upon remand additional evidence was given on both sides and the learned Judge returned his findings on the issues in assordance with the directions of this Court. Of the five issues remitted to the Court below the Subordinate Judge desided the 9th issue only in favour of the defendants. This issue related to the validity of an ikrarnama executed by the defendant No. 1 in favour of the plaintiff. All the other issues were decided in favour of the plaint. iff. The learned Vakil for the appellant has attacked most of these findings as well as some of the findings arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge on the issues desided before remand, and we may state generally that after careful consideration of the arguments on both sides we are not satisfied that any of the findings are incorrect. The ease as it seems to us presents no great difficulty.

The arguments of the learned Vakils for the appellant have been mainly directed to three points:—

(I) whether the properties in suit are properties of the Math.

(2) whether the alienations made by the defendant No. 1 were for legal necessity, and

(3) whether the punch was properly constituted and had the power of removing the defendant No. 1 and appointing the plaintiff in his place.

If the first and the third questions are answered in favour of the plaintiff, it will not be necessary to consider the second question, as all the alienations took place after the removal of the defendant No. 1 from the office of slebait.

The first point need not detain us long. This question was raised in the fifth issue which the learned Judge decided in favour of the plaintiff, giving full reasons for his decision.

It seems to us that upon the evidence no other conclusion is possible. Of the four properties, ka and kha are included in the original deed of endowment executed by Lal Gir in favour of Niranjan Gir Gossain and another dated the 16th October 1854. As regards the other properties, it is clear upon the evidence that these were acquired subsequently with the income of the properties originally endowed. All the properties are included in the Will of Prosottam Gir whereby the defendant No. I was appointed shabait of the debutter properties. The learned Judge refers to numerous documents in support of the conclusion that the defendant No. 1, who came into possession of the properties in suit as chela of Prosottam Gir, all along treated these properties as properties belonging to the idol.

We, therefore, answer this question in favour of the plaintiff.

As to the third question the evidence is equally clear. That the plaintiff was guilty of gross misconduct has been established by ample evidence taken both before and after the remand. One of these witnesses says "Ajraj used to visit public women. Helplessly drunk in company of public women I found Ajraj at his own biri. Ajraj married a woman; I heard of his marriage once; I asked bim why did be marry: he said he openly married a woman and also drunk wine and he would not care whether the purch would eat him or not." To the same effect is the evidence of a number of other witnesses. It is not, however, necessary to examine this evidence in detail as Ajraj stands condemned by his own admission. It appears that in September 1913 there was a dasoity in his bouse and he lodged a first information at the Bamangola Police Station. In that docoment Ajraj Gir complained of a dacoity in his horse in which a considerable quantity of cash and ornaments were said to have been removed from his house by the dacoits. There ornaments are those ordinarily used by women. Subsequently on the 4th September 1918 Ajraj made the following statement to the Investigating Police Officer :-

"I was eleeping inside the surfain of a chapperkhat standing on the east of the walled room facing north at about 8 or 9 p. m., on 17th Bhadra 1320, Tuesday last, My head was towards the west. I was awake owing to being ill. Within the room near the door towards the west was Dooshini Gossaini who could not see with her eyes in the outside. On the east side of the door my mistress Soudamini Gossaini and at a little distance towards the west in the verandah was Marda Harini."

The learned Vakil for the appellant did not and could not seriously repudiate the charge of immorality brought against Ajraj.

There is no doubt again that his conduct disqualified Ajraj from holding the office of thebait, and it has next to be considered whether it was open to the punch to remove him and appoint a successor.

In the deed executed by Lalgir Gossain dated the 16th October 1854 which created the endowment it is laid down that of the shebaits appointed by him whoever shall waste the poon; or shall misbehave shall be ousted from the shebaitship and shall be driven out from the hateli (house of the Mahadev), and if he does not go away, the punch of my easte is vested with authority to drive him out of the house if they get proof of his making waste or doing any misdeed. It is also laid down that against the decision of the runch no complaint or claim shall be admissible in any Court. Reference need only be made to the eviderse of Mahanth Padmanand Bharat, a very respectable witness from Purnes, who is a Zemindar with an income of 20 or 15 thousand rupees, a member of the local and District Board and an Hono. rary Magistrate. This witness is the Mahanth of 4 or 5 Mathe; he deposes that he belongs to the seet of Giri Gossain, that among them marriage is not allowed and that by sustom if any one of the Giri Gossain sect drinks wine or marries or bescmes addicted to vice, the punch can dismiss him and instal another stebait in his place. This evidence has received ample support from the evidence of a number of other witnesses examined in the case before and after remand. The existence of the sustom is also recognised in the case reported as Amrita Lal Shaha v. Gossain Ganpat Gir (1). It was objected that Lal Gir's Will refers in terms only to the persons whom he appointed his successors. In our opinion, on the materials before us, the Will must be read as incorporating the general enstom and directing its appliestion in a particular instance. As the Subordinate Judge points out, there is no rebutting evidence for the defence and we have no hesitation in agreeing with him that the existence of the eastom is established.

(1) 51 Ind. Cas. 8:4; 28 C. W. N. 491,

KARTIC CHANDRA U. GOSSAIN PROTAP CHANDRA.

The next point that arises for consideration is whether the punch was duly constituted and asted in conformity with the rules. It appears from the evidence that the punch, when they assembled, invited Ajraj to appear before them which Ajraj deslined to do. The punchnama contains the following statement:—

"Having got good and reliable evidense and knowing for certain by making neces. eary enquiries that the said Ajraj, having been addicted to vices and having lost his character, had, contrary to the long standing enstom of the Sany sis, married a low easte woman and taken her food, etc. and lived with her in her father's house leaving his residence and had neglected and obstructed the performance of the Shebi of the Idol Khubaneswar Mahadev and that the Dab Sheba was about to be stopped, the punch ex communicated the said Ajraj, and after declaring him to be quite unfit to hold the post of Shebait made over the sharge of earrying on the Sheba of the said idol to Gossain Protab Chandra Gir of English Bazaar." That Protab Gir is a man of position and character has not been denied. The sittings of the punch are said to have taken place in the house of the plaintiff. The word "house" in the language of the gest means the same thing as a Math, It has been argued that all the Giri Gos. sains competent to sit as members of the punch did not attend the meeting. Upon the evidence of witness No. 25 for the plaintiff it appears that there were altogether seventeen persons who might possibly have had a claim to sit on the punch. That out of these one was a lunetic, four had been ex-communicated and three gone on pilgrimage and were absent. It is not shown for the defence that there were any other Gossains available at the time, The plaintiff himself was one of the members of the punch but he very parly abstained from taking part in their deliberations, he being personally interected.

It appears that one Balkishen Gir was present, though his signature is not appended to the punchnamu. The punchnamu is signed by five persons, Ganga Gir, Ganpat Gir, Mahesh Gir, Mangal Gir, Ajodha Gir,

We are satisfied that on the evidence as to the procedure observed on these casassions that there were a sufficient number of Gossaics present to form a proper and regular quorum.

Among the members of the punch were some chelas who sat along with their gurus. It has been argued that this is an irregularity. There is, however, evidence to show that, during the lifetime of his guru, a chela who is of age may be member of the runch.

It has next been contended that plaintiff was not the pearest goliz of Ajraj and could not, therefore, take his place as a shebait. On this point the Court below has relied on the kursinamah contained in the Bhats' book Exhibits 1 to 1 (6). The Bhats are beralds who are interested in keeping up such a record. The book in our opinion somes from proper sustody and is evidence under section 32 of the Evidence Act. There is no reason to doubt its gennineness. There is a slight conflict between the kursinamah and the oral evidence but in the first place the relation. ships in question are not blood relationships though they are avalogous thereto' and in the second place they are very distant. It is not surprising, therefore, to find some confasion or inascuracy in the oral testimony. We see no reason to distrust the written record. There is no other slaimant in the field and we find with the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff is the nearest Gotia of the dismissed shebait Ajraj Gir.

There can be no doubt upon the evidence that succession is governed by gotia relationship and the point is not raised in the grounds of appeal. In the absence of a chela the nearest gotia succeeds,

The defendant No. 2 is a Pleader and something has been said as to the propriety of the transactions into which he entered with the defendant No. 1. In the view we take it is not necessary for us to consider the ease from that point of view.

In a suit by reversioners to set aside a sale for want of consideration, the lower Court found that although the price ostensibly received by the vendor was Rs. 700, the sum actually paid was Rs. 595 and that there was a fictitious entry in the sale-deed about the payment of Rs. 105. Thereupon it passed a decree that the sale would affect the rights of reversioners to the extent of Rs. 525 only. On appeal by the vendees it was found that the land in question, at the date of the sale, was not worth more than Rs. 595:-

Held, that as the sale would have been unobjectionable if the sum of Rs. 105 were left out of account altogether, the vendee should not be penalized merely because there was a fictitious entry in the sale-deed.

Items Ncs. 1, 2 and 5 have rever been challenged by plaintiffe, whose Fleader admitted in the First Court that these items must be allowed. Items Ncs, 3 and 6 have been passed by both Courts, nessessity as regards item No. 6 being held to be shown by the facts that the alienor had a large family to support and had no land free of mortgage at the time of the sale. The First Court also passed item No. 4, and dismissed the suit. But the learned District Judge on appeal holds payment of this sum of Es. 105 not proved and has given a the sale shall only affect decree that plaintiff's reversionary rights to the extent of Re. 595. The vendees appeal. Their Countel tries to argue that there is sufficient evidence to prove payment of this cum of Re. 1(5, which is said to have been paid in advance one day before registra-But there is a finding of fact against him. But supposing this sum was not really paid, then the only possible conelusion seems to be that it was a fietitions item entered to deter pre emptors. Taking this to be the case I have to deside whether there is any anfisient reason to In Wadhawa Mal v. upset the sale. Wadhawa (1) it was held that a vendee should not be penalized merely because he enters as part consideration an item which may possibly be fistitions in whole or in part, where that item is only a fraction of the purchase-money and where the sale would be anobjectionable if that item were left out of assount, There the item represented about 1.6th of the whole sale prise; here the item is only about 1.7th. A different view has no doubt been expressed in Keszr v. Sundar Singh (2) where the dispute was as to an item of Rs. 153, the sale being professed to be a sale for Rs. 950, but it may be observed that what is there said is after all merely obiter dictum as on review the elaim was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiffs were estopped by asquiessenses. (The final judgment, dated 16th December 1910, was delivered by Battigan and Kensington, JJ.). This greatly lessens the value of the view expressed in this judgment, and I have no hesitation in adopting the view expressed in the earlier judgment, which seems to me sound. It is to be noted that though the land in suit now has the benefit of canal irrigatior, it was only barani and chahi land in 1907 when it was sold, and I am not prepared to say that it was then worth more than Rs. 595. It is to be noted too that the plaintiffs waited nearly 12 years before bringing this suit and it may well be doubted whether they would have ventured to attack the sale even now, had they not been tempted to try their lack by the enhanced value of the land owing to its having become nahri land,

I accept the appeal and reversing the decree of the District Judge I restore the decree of the First Court dismissing the suit. The plaintiffs will pay costs in all lifetime, maintainability of.

A declaratory suit by a reversioner during the lifetime of an heiress that he will be entitled to get the property on her death is not maintainable.

Second appeal against a descee of the Additional Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 30th November 1918.

Mr. K. N. Malaviya, for the Appellant. Mr. Galsari Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that on the death of his mother he will be entitled to get a two-anna share in Mauza Malhipur.

There were three brothers, Sita Ram, Mata Din and Ram Lochan, the property in enit belonging to Ram Lochan. The plaintiff alleged that Ram Lochan was separate from his brothers. Ram Lochan died, the plaintiff said, 15 years ago, but it has been found that he died 27 years ago. He left him surviving a daughter, Musammat Bilasi. On the finding of the First Court that Ram Lochan was separate, she was his heir. The plaintiff is her son and presumptive heir.

In the plaint it is alleged, that after the ceath of Ram Lochan, Musammat Bilasi went to reside in Kulu and the names of Ram Lochan's brothers were entered in the revenue papers in place of Ram Lochan.

The plaint goes on to say:—"These brothers used to go to Kulu frequently and assured the plaintiff's mother that her property was safe. They also used to pay every year different amounts of money to the plaintiff's mother as profits."

In paragraph 5 the cause of action is stated as follows:—"This year the plaintiff (who was a minor) has come to know that the defendants have, after the death of Ram Losban, got their own names recorded against the property of Ram Losban instead of getting the name of the plaintiff's mother recorded against it. Hence the suit ". The main defence to the suit was, that Ram Losban and his brothers were joint, and consequently, that on Ram Losban's death the plaintiff had absolutely no right.

The First Court apparently found that although after Ram Lochan's death his brothers got their names recorded in the revenue papers, nevertheless they have been paying the profits of the property, at all events a portion of them, to Musammat Bilasi. It also found that the property was the reparate property of Ram Lochan, that the sons of Ram Lochan died in his life time and that Musammat Bilasi was his heir. It then granted the plaintiff the declaration he asked for. The Trial Court did not decide the issue which was raised, as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the suit in the life-time of his mother.

On appeal the learned Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur, relying on paragraph 642 of the 8th Edition of Mayne's Hindu Law and the cases therein eited, dismissed the suit on the ground that a declaratory suit during the life-time of the heiress was not maintainable. In car opinion this was correct. For all we know, all that she did to make arrangements by which WAS the brothers of Ram Lochan would be enabled to marage the property for her. The plaintiff himself admits that mother has been receiving at least some of the profits and she apparently made to complaint on this subject. It would be useless to give a decree to the plaintiff which might never have any effect. It will be open no doubt to the plaintiff if he survives his mother to sue for possession of the property if possession is denied him.

We dismiss the appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 83-Suit by commission agent against his principal to recover amount of loss on re-sale of goods-Limitation.

Where a commission agent buys goods for a principal, but through the latter's default in paying for the same, they are re-sold by the agent at a loss, a suit by the agent to recover the amount of the said loss with interest and other incidental expenses, must be brought within the period of limitation prescribed by Article 83 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. Limitation in such a case operates from the date of the payment made on behalf of the principal and not from the date of the sale. [p. 901, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

ABDIL RACOF, J .- The facts of the care giving rise to this appeal are few and simple. The plaintiffs are commission agents. At the request of the defendants they purchased two kothas of gram for them and paid the price out of their own pocket. Subsequently they sold them at a loss. The present suit is for the recovery of the loss together with interest and certain incidental expenses. The first kotha was purchased on the 28th July 1909, and it was sold on the 16th April 1912. The second kotha was purchased on the 23rd July 1910 and was sold on the 29th April The suit was instituted on the 27th July 1915. It was resisted on the plea of limitation and other grounds. The Court below has held that the Article of the Indian Limitation Act applicable to the suit is Article &3, and the suit is barred by time. The plaintiffs have some up in appeal to this Court, and three main pleas have been urged on their behalf, namely :-

(i) that having regard to the peculiar nature of the suit, no specific Article being applicable, Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Act must be applied assorting to which the suit is well within time;

(ii) that Article 61 is applicable and the suit being within six years is within time under the Panjab Loans Limitation Act.

(iii) that even if Article 83 is applicable the suit with reference to the second transaction is within time as the period ought to be calculated from the date of the second sale, which took place on the 29th April 1913.

In the ease of Mangii Ram v. Ram Saran Das (1) under similar eiroumstanses, a similar question arose and a Division Bench of the Panjab Chief Court held that Article 83 applied. The learned Counsel has tried to distinguish the present case from the one dealt with in the raling referred to above on the ground that the transaction which gave rise to the claim in the latter was of a wagering character, and the liability of the defendants had arisen by the operation of the law, and that in the present case the liability arises out of the contract itself. our mind in principle there is no such distinetion. The plaintiffs' slaim in both the cases was for recomper on the allegation that they had acted as the defendants' agents.

Article 120 of the Limitation Act can apply only to a suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the Second Schedule of the Act. We have, therefore, to deside whether there is any other Article, which is applicable to the present case. The Division Bench has held that Article 83 applies and Article 61 does not apply. We are bound by this desision and must hold that the suit is governed by Article 83. It has, however, been contended that even if Article 83 applies the period of limitation should be calculated from the date of sale and not from the date of purchase. A reply to this argument is to be found in the judgment of the case of Kanlaswami Pillai v. Avayambıl (2). At page 17.* the following passage is to be found, which decides the very point in the following words :-

"Now, when is the agent damnified as regards the advances made by him on assount of the principal in the course of his agency? In the absence of a contract to the contrary we think it must be taken that the agent is damnified when he makes the payment."

It has, however, been argued that possibly there was 's contract to the contrary' in the present case. This is a suggestion, however, which is made for the first time in appeal before us. There is no trace of any such suggestion to be found on the record. In our opinion the view taken by the Court below is correct and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

MARTINEAU, J .- I conour. The distinction bet ween the case of Manghi Ram v. Ram Saran Das (1), and the present case consists merely in the fast that in the former case the defendants were not legally liable to the third persons with whom their agents had entered into certain transactions, whereas in the present ease they were liable. This distingtion does not affect the question whether Article 61 or Article 83 is to be applied, In both cases the payments were made by the plaintiffs for the defendants, and the Article applicable in one case would apply in the other also. In Manghi Ram v. Ram Saran Das (1), there is no discussion as to the applicability of Article 61. Prima facie that Article would have been applicable, but the learned Judges held that Article 83 fitted the facts, and they apparently considered that preference should be given to it over Article 61, which was more general than Article 83. With regard to Article 83 the view they took was that the right given to the agent by section 222 of the Contract Act to be recouped by his principal in respect of losses sustained in the agency was a direct sonsequence of the agency contract, and that the suit was thus one upon a contract to indemni'y.

The same reasoning would apply in the present case. It must, therefore be held, following Manghi Ram v. Ram Saran Die (1), that the present suit is governed by Article 23 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act.

I agree with my learned brother that the plaintiffs were damnified when they made the payments. The suit is consequent. ly barred by limitation, having been institut. BAO MARSINGH RAO D. BETT MAHA LAKSHMI BAI.

The defendant failed to establish his allegation, but, on the other hand, there was nothing to prove that the wife of A had ever borne a child. Plaintiff urged that as the defendant had failed to fix his paternity in B, a conclusive presumption of his paternity in A arose under section 112 of the Evidence Act:

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by Rao Narsingh Rao for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The ease is a very important one and the position of the applicant is such as to enlist the sympathy of every one acquainted with his history.

Rao Nareingh Rao ecmmenced an action against one Rani Kishori on the allegation that he was entitled to property of the value of upwards of fifty lakes because he was the son of Rao Balwant Singh and Musammat Dunaju. As Balwant Singh and Musammat Dunaju were husband and wife. He allegation that he was the son of Musammat Dunaju was the main essential fact to be proved. The Rani Keshori denied it and set up that Rao Narsingh Rao was in fact the son of one Shekher Singh. In the lower Court and here Rao Narsingh Rao failed to prove that Musammat Donsju was his mother and there are thus two concurrent findings against him.

We have listened very carefully to Mr. Nibal Chand's arguments with complete readiness to grant the application if that could consistently and properly be done.

Mr. Nihal Chand argues that the Court ought to have applied the provisions of section 112 of the Evidence Act and he formulates his case in this way. He says that when the defendants had failed to establish the case which they set up that Rao Narsingh Rao was the son of Shekhar Singb, thereupon there arose a conclusive presumption that Rao Narsingh Rao was the son of Musammat Dunaju by her husband, Rao Balwant Singh. We have pointed out elesowhere that the defendants were under no obligation to prove the paternity of Rao Narsingh Rao. It was for him to prove that he was the son of Musammat Danaju.

He has sited to us the ease of Narendra Nath Fahari v. Ram Gobind Pahari (1) and Tirlok Nath Shukul v. Lachmin Kunwari (2). It will noticed that in both those cases the Privy Council found as a fact that the lady had in fact given birth to a child and then on proof that the other requirements of the section were complied with, the sonelusive presumption arose.

Had Rao Narsingh Rao been able to prove that Musammat Dunaju had on the 2nd March 1894 given birth to a child, practically all his difficulties would have disappeared, as it would, in our opinion, in the circumstances have been proper to conclude that he was in fact the child and that Rao Balwant Singh was the father. Section 1:2 could only have been relied upon by him after proof of the giving of birth to a child by Musammat Danaju

The weight of evidence was against the alleged child bearing by Musammat Danajo, and being of opinion that section 112 has no epplication, we are compelled to decide

JUDGMENT .- These appeals are directed against an order of remand made in a suit for recovery of compensation for short delivery The first defendant was the of goods. Secretary of State for India in Council representing the Eastern Bengal State Railway and the second defendant was the agent of the Bengal and North Western Railway Company. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the claim against both the defendants. As regards the first defendant he held that the less was not due to the neglect of or theft by the servants of the Eastern Bengal State Railway. As regards the second defendant, he held on the authority of the decisions in Ram Dass Sein v. Oecil Etephenson (1), Nubeen Uhunder Paul v. Occil Stephenson (2), Campbell v. Jac'son, Manager of the Jokai Assam Tea Co. Limited (3), and India General S. N. R. Oo. v. Lal Mohan Saha (4), that the Agent could not be sued as such and that the suit as against him had been improperly framed. The plaintiffs appealed against the decree of dismissal made by the Subordinate Judge. As regards the first defendant, the District Judge held in consurrence with the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs had failed to prove negligence on the part of the Eastern Bengal State Railway. As regards the second defendant, the District Judge held, as the Subordinate Judge had done, that the suit could not be maintained against him. In this view. the District Judge should, prima facie. have confirmed the decree of dismissal made by the primary Court. But he proseeded instead, on the petition of the plaintiffe, to make the B. N. W. Railway Co. a party defendant in place of the Agent and to remand the case for trial de novo. Separate appeals have been preferred against this order by the two defendants.

On behalf of the Agent, the order has been attacked on the ground that the Company should not have been made a party. Theplaint. iffs have taken a preliminary objection on the ground that as the name of the Agent has been ordered to be removed from the record. he is not competent to appeal. This object tion is manifestly untenable. The Agent was a party to the suit and was allowed his costs by the Trial Court when the suit was dismissed against him. The order of the District Judge deprives him of the costs allowed by the First Court and does not award him costs in the lower Appellate Court. He has clearly been prejudiced by the order of the District Judge and is competent to question its propriety by way of appeal even though it be conceded that he is not competent to question the propriety of the order in so far as it directs the Company as such to be made a party. It has not been disputed before us and in face of the authorities mentioned by the Subordinate Judge it cannot be seriously disputed that the suit as framed is not tenable against the Agent. We are consequently of opinion that in the appeal preferred by the Agent (A. A. O. No. 258 of 1920) the proper order to make is to allow the appeal and to direct that the suit as against the Agent be dismissed with costs in all the Court.

On behalf of the Secretary of State the order of the District Judge has been assailed on the ground that in view of the consurrent finding of two Courts that there has been no negligence on the part of the Eastern Bergal State Railway, the suit as against him should have been dismissed, and that even if the suit should be tried de novo, against the newly added defendant B. N. W. Railway Co., he should not be put to further expense in connection with proceedings which cannot possibly affect him. There is plainly no answer to this argument. We are consequently of opinion that in the appeal preferred by the Secretary of State (A. A O. No. 300 of 1920) the proper order to make is to allow the appeal and to direct that the suit as against the Scoretary of State be dis. missed with costs in all the Courts.

We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs in each appeal.

The result of our decision will be that the only residue of the order of the District Judge which will remain operative will be the order that the B. N. W. Railway Co, he made a party defendant and that the suit be tried against them de noto by the primary Court. This order, it may be noted, was made by the District Judge without notice to this

B. N. W. Railway Co., and we need not coneider at this stage what objections the Company may urge if and when plaintiffs proceed with the suit as against them.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant, The Hon'ble Pandit Shee Narain, R. B., for the Plaintiffs-Respondents. FIRM OF KARIM PARASE TAJ-TD-DIN U. RATEA BIRG T.

JUDGMENT.—Taj-ud-Din and Karim Bakheb, who are appellants in the present ease, were tenants of two shops at Rawalpindi. They held an ordinary monthly lease on payment of Rs. 38 a month. A dispute as to enhancement of rent was settled on the 1st of January 1915 when the landlord, Gappat Rai, executed a dooument which runs as follows:—

"To day, let of January 1915, I have given the shops on rent to Taj ud-Din at a rental of Rs. 3 8 per month, rent to be paid monthly. So long as Taj ud-Din occupies the shops, the rent shall not be raised nor lowered, nor shall I eject him. But in ease of his refural to pay the rent then I shall have the right to turn him out. Accordingly this kirayanama is written for record in ease of need."

Sometime afterwards the value of the property having increased, Ganpat Rai sued for ejectment. This suit was dismissed for default under Order IX, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code. On the 8th of January 1919 Ganpat Rai sold the shops to the present plaintiffs who on the 13th of January 1919 served the defendants with notice and subsequently brought the present suit in which they claimed to eject the defendants, and also claimed Rs. 30 rent for one month at an enhanced rate. The old landlord, Ganpat Rai, is a pro forma defendant.

The First Court held the entry in defendants' bahi to be admissible in evidence, even though unregistered, and on the ground that defendants had a right of occupancy refused to eject them and merely gave a decree for Rs. 38 as rent for one month. The Senior Subordinate Judge on appeal held that the document was inadmissible for want of registration and gave a decree for ejectment and for Rs. 7 as rent for one month.

The defendants appeal to this Court and, on their behalf, Dr. Nand Lal urges that the document in question does not require registration. He urges in the first place that it is merely a memorandum of an agreement which had been arrived at orally between the parties. Looking at the terms of the document, I have not the least hesitation in holding that it is not a mere memorar dom but is itself the agreement arrived at crelly and then reduced to writing. Then Dr. Nand Lal urges that this is really no new lease but is simply a variation in the terms of the old lease and so does not require registration. He eites the following authorities:—

Narain Coomary v. Ramkrishna Duss (1), Satyesh Chunder v. Dhunpul Singh (2), Obai Goundan v. Ramalinga Ayyar (3) and Umar Bakhsh v. Baldeo Singh (4).

All of these seem to me elearly distinguishable. The ease of Narain Coomary v. Ramkrishna Dass (1) is merely one where an entry was made resiting the terms of the lease already existing, no alterations in that lease being made. In Satyesh Chunder v. Dhunpul Singh (2) the document in question was merely a writing by the tenant in which he agreed to allow an enhancement of rent. In Obai Goundan v. Ramalinga Ayear (3) the document in question was one given by the landlord to the tenant simply varying the terms of the tenancy as to the amount of rent payable, The case of Umur Bakhsh v. Baldeo Singh (4) is one of a lease terminable by either party at the end of any month. The lease in the present case is one which enabled the tenant to continue in possession so long as he paid his rent. This was, I holda totally fresh lease and not a lease limited to a year, and, therefore, it is inadmissible in evidence for want of registration; see Sheogholam v. Euddree Nath (5) and Mania v. Lallubhai (6). The dosument itself being inadmissible the defendants capnot fall back on the oral evidence.

Dr. Nand Lal now wishes to argue that even under the old lease the tenants had a right of occupancy but this seems to be an entirely new plea and I canot find any thing in the grounds of appeal to this Court which covers the point.

The proof of the execution of a mortgage with reference to the provisions of section 68 of the Evidence Act and its validity with reference to the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act are two different things. Therefore, where in a suit upon a mortgage bond the defendant admits the execution of the bond but raises the defence that the bond should not be regarded as a mortgage bond, the plaintiff, although exempted from calling any attesting witness under section 68 of the Evidence Act by reason of the provisions of section 70 of the said Act, is still bound to show that the document was executed in the presence of attesting witnesses as required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act [p. £67, col. 1.]

a suit upon a mortgage bond.

The defendant admitted the execution of the bond but pleaded payment and satisfaction of it. He also raised the defence that the bond should not be regarded as a mortgage bond.

The Court of first instance held that the execution of the bond not being challenged, the recessity of its proof did not arise. That Court overruled the other pleas of the defendant and gave a decree to the plaintiff.

On appeal by the defendant, the learned Additional District Judge was of opinion that the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act had not been complied with. He held that the seribe having executed the deed on behalf of the appellant was not competent to attest his own signature, and there being no other evidence, allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit.

It has been contended on behalf of the plaintiff who is the appellant before us that, having regard to the provisions of section 70 of the Evidence Act, there was no necessity for calling any attesting witness under section 68 of the Act; and reliance was placed upon the cases of Satish Chandra Mitra v. Jogendra Nath Mahalanobis (1) and Nibaran Chandra Sen v. Nagendra Chandra Sen (2).

In those eases, however, the only question related to proof of execution of the mortgage-bond. No question was raised before, or decided by, this Court, in either of the two cases as to validity of the mortgage-bond with reference to the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Ast. The two questions are different, one being the question of proof of execution of a document required to be attested by calling one attesting witness under section 63 of the Evidence Act, which, however, is not required where the execution of the document is admitted by the executant as laid down in section 70 of the Evidence Act. The other question relates to the validity of the mortgage even though the document might be proved according to law. This distinction does not appear to have been kept in view in the Court below: and although the question of the validity of the mortgage-bond was set up in the written statement and put in issue, the Court of first instance, at any rate, does not appear to have appreciated the distinction between the two.

It appears that the mortgage bond, on the face of it, contained the names of four attesting witnesses of whom two were illiterate and the seribe of the deed says that he put down the names of those illiterate witnesses at their request. It is not clearly stated, however, whether they were attesting witnesses in the sense that the document was executed in their presence. There were, however, two other witnesses who signed their own names and although the seribe by reason of his having signed the name of the executant on the decoment on his behalf is not a competent attesting witness, as laid down in the case of Rajani Kanta Bhadra v. Panchamanda (3), there are, as stated above, other persons whose names appear as attesting witnesses in the document. Under the eireumstaness, the plaintiff should be given an opportunity of producing evidence to show that the document was executed in the precence of attesting witnesses so as to satisfy the requirements of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. This, however, must be on terme, as the point was taken in the written statement.

FIRM SARDAR MAL-HARDAT BAI V. PIRM SHEO BAKSH RAI-SRI NARAIN.

An award made three months after the date of a notice calling on the arbitrators to act but within three months from the day when they actually entered on the reference and heard the evidence is within the time mentioned in Schedule I, clause 3 of the Arbitration Act and is consequently valid.

The provisions "entering on the reference" and "having been called upon to act by notice in writing" in clause 3 of Schedule I to the Arbitration Act are alternative in this sense that where no reference is entered upon at all, then the time runs from the notice calling upon the arbitrators to act. But, on the other hand, even although the arbitrators may be called upon to act by notice if they enter upon the reference, they have three months from that moment for making their award and for enlarging the time for making the award if the circumstances at the reference satisfy them that they cannot complete the award within three months.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Cawppore, dated the 21st February 1921.

Messrs. B. E. O'Conor, G. W. Dillon, Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. S. N. Mukerji, for the Appellant.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, Dr. S. N. Kot u and Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We have some to the conclusion that this appeal must be allowed.

We think the learned Judge has placed too narrow an interpretation upon the words of clause (3) in the Schedule.

We are of opinion that the provisions "entering on the reference" and "having been called upon to act by notice in writing" are alternative in this sense, that where no reference is entered upon at all, then the time runs from the notice calling upon the arbitrators to act. But, on the other hand, even although the arbitrators may be called upon to act by entering upon the reference, if they enter upon the reference, they have three months from that moment for making their award and for enlarging the time for making the award if the circumstances at the refer. ence eatiefy them that they cannot complete the award within three months. To hold otherwise would seem to strike out from-elause 3 the words within three month after entering on the reference" in a case where one of the parties happened to call ujon the arbitrators to act before they began the reference.

This clause was considered by the English Court of Appeal in Baring Gould v. Sharping ton Combined Pick and Shovel Syndicate (1). And the view which we take seems to be that which was laid down by the Master of the Rolls, that late Lord Lindley, in a passage contained in page 91 of the report.

In addition to that, under the old clause in England, which was slightly different in form, an equally strong Court came to the conclusion in Baker v. Stephens (2) that "entering upon the reference" means "not when an arbitrator accepts the office, or takes upon himself the duty but when he actually enters upon the matter of the reference, when the parties are before him, or under some peremptory order compelling him to conclude the hearing ex parte."

The result is that the appeal is allowed and the award is ordered to be filed. The appellant will get his costs here and below. The costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

This order as to costs does not include the respondent Sri Kishen. We direct that there should be no order as against him for costs.

Although Order XLIII, rule 1 (w) of the Code of Civil Procedure allows an appeal against an order granting a review, that clause must be read with rule 7 of Order XLVII by which the grounds, on which an order granting a review can be set aside on appeal, are limited. JUDGMENT.

RULE No. 664 or 1920.

This Rule is directed against an order of the District Judge of Bankura setting aside an order of the Muneif of Khatra granting an application for review. One Kanta Mal obtained a preliminary mortgage decres on 14th June 1916 against defendant No. 1, the mortgagor, and defendant No. 2 a subsequent transferes who is the petitioner in this Rule. Kanta admittedly died on 8th February 1917. On 18th November 1918 Kanta Mal's sons applied for a final decres in that mortgage suit, On 21st Dasember 1918 they applied for substitution of their names as plaintiffs in the place of Kanta Mal. This application was allowed without notice to either defendant and on 25th January 1919 a final mortgage-deeres was passed. On 24th February 1919 the defend. ant No. 2 applied for a raview of that mortgage desroo and that application was allowed. Then the sons of Kanta appealed from that order granting the review. That appeal was sussessful and the present Rule is directed against the order passed in that appeal. We do not think it necessary to go into the merits of the case. The only question that arises in this Rule is whether the order of the District Judge was made with or without jurisdiction. Although Order XLIII, role 1 (w) allows an appeal against an order granting a review, that clause must be read with rule 7 of Order XLVII by which the grounds, on which an order granting a review can be set aside on appeal, are limited. We hold that unless the facts of the case were sufficient to bring the grounds of appeal within those limited grounds, the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to set aside the order of review on appeal. The learned District Judge has held that clause (c) of that Rule is applieable and the order of review must be set aside on the ground that the application to the Monsif for review was made after the expiration of the period of limitation specified therefor. But, as already stated, the appliestion for review was made within one month of the order sought to be reviewed. To meet this objection the learned District Judge states that although the order sought to be reviewed is the order granting the final decree, it is really an application to review the order allowing substituof the sons of the plaintiff. We think that when, on the face of it, the application for review was clearly in time, the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to treat the application as if it were for a review of the earlier order. By so doing it acted without jurisdiction and its order passed on appeal is illegal. We accordingly make this Rule absolute, set aside the order complained of and restore the order of the Mansif dated 21st February 1920 allowing the application for raview. The opposite party will pay the petitione: his costs, the cw.t te recesses goised est goiread mohurs.

RULE No. 664-A OF 1920.

The learned Vakil for the petitioner concedes that he can take no objection to the order against which the Rule is directed, that is to say, the order dismissing the appeal against the order of abatement passed by the Munsif on 13th March 1920. All that is necessary to state is that, now that the Munsif's order granting the review is restored, the order passed on 13th March 1920 will stand good. In this Rule we make no order as to sosts.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 118-Partition-Revenue Court, whether can partition nouse.

A Revenue Court making a partition under the provisions of Chapter VII of the U. P. Land Revenue Act has no jurisdiction to make a division of houses by reason of the provisions of section 118 of the Act.

Therefore a plaintiff basing his title to a portion of a house under an order of partition of a Revenue

Court cannot succeed.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Farrukhabad, dated the 15th April 1920.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Appellants. Mr. A. Sanyal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- In my opinion the suit of the plaintiffs has been rightly dismissed. The suit was to recover possession of a portion of a house said to stand on a plot, No. 52/1, in the village of Ninawa.

A reference to paragraph 4 of the plaint shows the title on which the plaintiffs were suing. The allegation was that in the course of a partition earried out by a Revenue Court and which took effect from the 1st of July 1918, a house standing on old plot No. 52 had divided between the parties. One portion of the house was allotted to the plaintiffs as No. 52/1 and the rest of the house was allotted to the other party as standing on No. 52/2. The cass for the plaintiffs was that subsequent to the desision of the partition Court the defendants had dispossessed them.

It appears to me to be absolutely clear that a Revenue Court making a partition under the provisions of Chapter VII of the Land Revenue Act has no jurisdiction to make a division of houses. That has been laid down in a Bench decision of this Court reported as Ashiq Husain v. Muhammad Jan (1). A similar ruling has been given in Oadh [see Igbal Narain v. Sura) Narain (2).] The learned Counsel for the appellants has referred me to a Full Bench ruling of this Court reported as Muhammod Salig v. Laute Ram (3) in which it was laid down that a Revenue Court making a partition under the Land Revenue Ast has jurisdiction to make a division of trees growing upon land. It is argued by analogy, that the same powers ought to be deemed to exist in the Revenue Court with respect to houses. In the Fall Banch desision it was very clearly pointed out that with regard to buildings there were special provisions contained in the Chapter relating to partition and a reference to the present Land Revenue Act also shows that those provisions in the earlier Act have been repeated. They are to be found in section 118 of the Act. No special provision is made with regard to the division of trees and consequently it was held by the Full Bench that the Revenue Court having authority to divide lands had also jurisdiction to divide the trees standing upon it. I must take it, therefore, that the law is definitely settled and that consequently the plaintiffs who found their ease upon the partition in order to put forward the title which they wished to vindicate, are out of Court. The order of the partition Court could not give them a title to the premises in dispute. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859), s. 37"Settlement," meaning of-Bajeapti taluk, settlement of.

The expression "after the time of settlement" in section 37 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act does not mean "after the time of the Permanent Settlement of 1793." The word "settlement" as there used refers not to the Permanent Settlement but to the contract with Government under which the estate was held. [p. 912, cols. 1 & 2.]

In the case of a Bajeapti taluk the contract with Government is first made when revenue is assessed thereon and it is transformed into a revenue paying estate liable to be sold for its arrears, [p. 912, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against a decree of Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 10th May 1920, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1675 of 1919, against that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Chittagong, dated the 2nd June 1919, affirming that of the Muusif, First Court at Satkania, dated the 19th February 1918.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of NEWBOULD, J .- The plaintiff in this suit elaimed as purchaser of a dar-taluki right to certain land, his vendor having obtained a lease from the purchaser of a bajeapti taluk at a sale for arrears of revenue. He sued the defendant for establishment of his title to and resovery of possession of the land in suit. He obtained a decree deslaring his dar taluki right to the land in suit; but his prayer for khas possession was disallowed. Plaintiff's case is that the land in suit was held by the defendant No. 1 as a raigat and that he abandoned this raigati right in favour of the plaintiff and that consequently the plaintiff entitled to khas possession. The findings of both the lower Courts are that the defendant No. 2 had etmami right to the land and that that stmami right not annulled by the revenue sale. It is found that the bajeapti taluk was ereated in 1844 but the etmami right was in existence, at any rate, in 1837. It is contended that this finding is insufficient and that in order to make the tenure exempted from annulment under section 37 of Act XI of 1859 the Court should have found that this etmami had been in existence from the time of the Permanent Settlement. support of this contention reliance is placed on the ease of Nagendra Lal Chowdhury v. Nazir Ali (1). It does not appear from the findings of the lower Court whether this etmam is covered by the first or the second of the exception classes to section 37; but the point does not seem to be really material. It it is covered by the first exception and is an istemrari or mokurrari tenure, then, as in the case which I have first cited, the facts now found are suffisient to justify the presumption that the tenure existed from the time of the Permanent Settlement. If, however, the etmami tenure is one which has not been held at fixed rent, then the finding that it was in existence at the time of the settlement of the bateapti taluk in 1844 is sufficient to make this exception applicable.

This appeal was argued at considerable length. The other point urged was that the evidence did not justify the findings of the lower Courts on the facts. It was suggested that there had been misconstruction of documents in coming to these findings; but there is no question of construction of documents in this case. A finding of fact based on documentary evidence or an inference drawn from documentary evidence is as much binding in second appeal as a finding of fact based on oral evidence.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for ejectment on the basis of title acquired by purchase at a sale for arrears of revenue held under Act XI of 1859. The baicapti taluk purchased by the plaintiff was made an entire estate in 1844. At that time the lands comprised in the taluk were subject to the etnam tenure set up by the defendants which, it has been found, was in existence in the year 1837, that is, before the creation of the taluk in the year 1844. In these circumstances, the question arises whether (1) 10 C. W. N. 503.

the plaintiff is entitled to eject the defendante under section 37 of Act XI of 1859, which provides as follows: "The purchaser of an entire estate in the permanently settled districts of Bengal, Bibar and Orisea, sold under this Act for the recovery of arrears due on account of the same, shall acquire the estate free from all encumbrances which may have been imposed upon it after the time of Settlement and shall be entitled to avoid and annul all under-tenures and forthwith to eject all under-tenants with the following exceptione: - First, istemrari or mokurrari tenures which have been beld at a fixed rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement; secondly, tenures existing at the time of Settlement which have not been held at a fixed rent: provided always that the rents of such tenures shall be liable to enbancement under any law for the time being in force for the enhancement of the rent of such tenures." On behalf of the plaintiff appellant, the argument has been put forward that the expression "After the time of set!lement" means "After the time of the Permuent Sattlement of 1793." In cur opinion, this contention is not The section taken as a well-founded. whole makes it abundantly clear that a distinction is drawn between the settlement of the estate which is brought to sale and the Permanent Settlement of 1793. The two expressions are not identical, This was pointed out by Mr. Justice Macpherson in the case of Raj Chunder Chowdhry v. Shaikh Busheer Mahomed (2), where he observed as follows: "We think that the Judge is wrong in the construction which he has put upon the word 'settlement' in the first paragraph of section 37 of Ast XI of 1859. The word as there used refers not to the Permanent Settlement but to the Settlement which took place after resumption by Government of the lands previously held as lakheraj. That this is so, is evident when the whole of the section is read together; and where the Permanent Settlement is referred to, namely, in the first of the exceptions immediately following, the words 'Permanent Settlement' are used." This exposition of the law was adopted in the case of Koowar Singh V. Gour

Sunder Pershad Singh (3), where it was held that the term 'settlement' means the contract with Government whenever that may have been made. In the case then before the Court the original estate had been created in 1/93, and had been subsequently partitioned under the Partition Act, so that the original entire estate was broken up into a number of independent estates. It was held that each of these new estates was an entire estate such as was contemplated by Act XI of 1859; and, further, that as the partition did not alter the amount of revenue payable but merely apportioned that amount, each fragment of the original estate must be deemed to have been ereated a permanently settled estate in 1793, that is, when the contract with Government was first made. See also Tamasha Bibi v. Ashutosh Dhur (4). In the case before us, there is no room for doubt or dispute that the contract with Government in respect of the ba capti taluk was first made in 1844, when revenue was assessed thereon and it was transformed into a revenue paying estate liable to be sold for its arrears. This view is really not opposed to the decision in Nagendra Lal Choudhury v. Nazir Ali (1). We hold accordingly that the view taken by Mr. Justice Newbould as to the construction of section 37 of Act XI of 1859 is sorrect.

If this interpretation be adopted, the plaintiff cannot possibly succeed. No doubt, the insidents of an et mami tenure, which were investigated by this Court in Jogesh Chandra. Roy v. Makbul Ali (5), have not been determined by the lower Appellate Court, and it has not been found whether the etman set up by the defendants is covered by the first or the second of the exceptions to section 37; but this is immaterial. If it is covered by the first exception and is an istimrari or mokurrari tenure, then, as in the case of Nogendra Lal Chowdhury V. Natir Ali (1) the facts found would justify a presumption that the tenure existed at. the time of the Permanent Settlement. On the other hard, if the elmam is one which has not been held at fixed rent, then the finding that it was in existence at the time of the original settlement of the bojearts

JUDGMENT .- The plaintiff in this case sued for possession of land alienated by Shib Dial who had appointed the plaintiff as his beir before the alienation took place. The plaintiff stated that the land was ancestral and that the sale was without legal necessity and the first point was found in his favour and the suit was decreed in The defendant alience appealed to the District Judge who upheld the finding. A second appeal was preferred to this Court and the main points raised were that the land was not anesstral, and that anyhow the plaintiff as the appointed heir sould not question the actions of Shib Dial. The earned Judge dismissed the appeal holding the land to be ancestral but not deciding specifically the question whether the plaintiff eould succeed in his suit merely as the appoint. ed beir of the alienor. Against this desision an appeal nader eleuse 10 of the Letters Patent has been filed, and the only ground seriously argued before us is that the plaintiff did not sue as a collateral and that he had no locus standi to sue mere. ly as an appointed heir. We agree with the latter contention and also find that plaintiff's locus siandi as a collateral was not clearly raised in the Trial Court or Appellate Courts. We find, however, that the plaintiff is undoubtedly a collateral, though somewhat remote, of the alienor, and we consider that we are right in thicking that the lower Courts interpreted the meaning of the witnesses on the point to be that the land alienated was the ancestral land of the plaintiff as a collateral of Shib Dial. We may also notice that in the plaint a reference is made to the Will in the plaintiff's favour in which he is referred to as a collateral. The point, therefore, though not specifically raised, was before the lower Courts and sould have been adjudieated upon by them.

It is urged before us that even if the land is ancestral qua the plaintiff and the alienor and if he is a remote collateral, he still had no locus stands to sue in the presence. of many nearer reversioners even if he is also an appointed heir. We do not agree that this principle applies to the present case. The right of a reversioner to obtain a declaratory decree in the ease of an alienation of ances. tral property by a male proprietor depends. firstly, on his vested rights in the property alienated, and secondly, on the probability of the inheritance thereof opening in his favour. In the present case which is one for possession, the plaintiff has vested rights and by the appointment in his favour is entitled to possession before others though nearer collaterals.

The other grounds of appeal were not pressed seriously and we dismiss the appeal.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 142— Possession, suit tor—Property not incapable of acts of possession—Presumption of possession following title —Adverse possession—Appellate Court, duty of, before reversing decision of Trial Court.

Where in a suit for recovery of possession on a declaration of title the plaintiff asserts that the land is capable of possession and adduces evidence of definite acts of ownership, he must fail unless he proves possession within 12 years even assuming that the title is with him and he cannot rely upon the presumption that possession follows title. [p. 915, col. 1.]

An Appellate Court should not reverse the decision of the Trial Court only on consideration of some of the grounds upon which the decision of that Court is based. [p. 914, col, 2]

Appeal against a decree of the Subcrdinate Judge, First Court, Burdwan, dated the 2nd August 1919, reversing that of the Additional Munsif. Asansole, dated the 20th of May 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bankim Chandra Manumdar (with him Babu Bankim Chandra Mooker;ee), for the Appellant.—The suit was for recovery of possession on declaration of title. The Munsif decreed the suit after an elaborate discussion of the whole of the evidence on the record. But the lower Appellate Court in reversing the Munsif's decision has not taken into consideration all the grounds upon which the Trial Court's decision was based. In dealing with the question of limitation the lower Appellate Court should have taken into consideration the fact that the lands in suit were waste lands. So the plaintiffs should have been given the benefit of the presumption that in the case of such lands possession follows title. The learned Subcrdinate Judge has not also come to any clear finding on the question whether the plaintiffs got into possession again before their title was extinguished by the adverse possession of the defendants.

Babus D. N. Chakravarty, Jatindra Mohan Moolerjee and Mr. J. W. Chippendaio), for the Respondent.—It is not necessary that an Appellate Court should scrutinize every bit of evidence. It is sufficient for it to state the general grounds of its decision and the reasons for its conclusion as to the truth or otherwise of the party's case. The question of title having been found against the plaintiffs, the decision on the question of limitation is clearly immaterial.

Babu Ramchandra Majumdar replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of the disputed land on declaration of the plaintiffs' title to the same.

The Court of first instance decreed the suit, but that decree was set aside by the lower Appellate Court which dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

The Court of Appeal below has decided both the questions of title and limitation against the plaintiffs, but we think that it has not dealt with the ease properly. With regard to the question of title, the learned Sabordinate Judge observes " the Munsif has stated many things in his judgment regarding title and possession in respect of the lands, but most of his observations are based upon surmises ". He does not state, however, what they are. The Munsif elaborately discussed the evidence as to title. The learned Subordinate Judge refers to sertain dosuments but appears to have considered only some of the grounds upon which the Muneif based his decision. The judgment is one of reversal, and we do not think that he has dealt with the question satisfactorily.

As regards the question of limitation, the Court of Appeal below has held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove possession within twelve years. That would ordinarily be sufficient to dispose of the case, as it falls under Article 142 of the Limitation Act, and the plaintiffs must fail unless they prove possession within twelve years, even assuming that the title is with them. It is contended that if the plaintiffs have got title and the lande are waste, there was a presumption that possession follows title. But the plaint. iffs asserted that the land was expable of possession and address evidence of definite acts of ownership. In these cirthe plaintiffs cannot eumstances. upon any presumption (assuming that they have title) and if the ovidence addaged is not accepted, the suit must be dismissed on the ground of limitation. It appears that both parties addaesd evidence of definite acts of ownership having been exercised upon the land. The Munsif held that Ails were raised by the Krishans of the -plaintiffs and that they also cultivated til and kali on the disputed land for some years. The defendants also adduced evidence of possession. The learned Subordinate Jedge, however, says that the lands are admittedly danga.

The plaintiffs alleged that their lessors were in possession through a tenant Bipin Napit. The learned Subordinate Judge in the earlier portion of his judgment seems to have disbelieved the allegation. He says The lease of this Bipin Napit is not produesd. The defendants' case is that Bipin was turned out by Lukbi Narayan." This Lukhi Narayan was the vendor of the defendants. If Bipin held the land as tenant before the settlement with the plaintiffs which took place in 1901, and if Bipin was dispossessed by the defendants' vendor, there could not be any continuance of possession of the plaintiffe' lessors or of the plaintiffs even if they had title, unless they subsequently resovered possession within 12 years of the suit, and the case might have been disposed of on this ground alons. But the learned Sabordinate Judge says-"The dicd ted tweeds breese ent no sanshive parties have been trying to oust each other of possession sines a number of years." This implies that the plaintiffs got into Dossession at any rate once, there can be no question of ousting unless a party is in possession. And if that 14 to the mere fast that Bigin was onsted would not be conclusive: because if, before Lokhi Narayan or the defendants had acquired a title by adverse possession for twelve years after oneting Bipin, the plaintiffs again got into possession within twelve years before suit, and if they were the rightful owners, their claim would not be barred by limitation. The findings of the Court of Appeal below on the point are, therefore, not clear.

In these cirsumstances, we think that the case should go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the appeal may be re heard and disposed of assording to law. Costs to abide the result.

JUDGMENT .- These are cross-appeals against a decree of the Additional Judge of We have heard Counsel at Allahabad. length in both cases and have come to the conclusion that the decision of the Court below should be maintained and that both appeals should be dismissed.

The dispute between the narties relates to an area of 27 bighas and 8 biswas which is situated in a village salled Marza Ghosia, Mahal Turab Ali. The suit, which was filed by Musammat Jhamola Kunwar, plaintiff, was filed in consequence of certain directions given by a Revenue Court in which an application for partition of this village had been filed by Thakur Hanwant Singh and Thakur Raghuraj Singh.

The facts of the case are comewhat complicated, but the following statement of them will show the point which arises for decision :there are three sets In this village of co-shares. Hanwant Singh and Ragburaj Singh between them owned a 4-annas share. Formerly one Talaiyar and his wife Siddan Bibi owned a 6-annas share and Muhammad Igbal and his wife, Champa Bibi, another 6annas share.

It is found that in or about the year 1887 the co-sharers in these villager, in order to avoid suits against each other for profits, agreed to an allotment of certain lands which the co sharers were to hold in their own occupation. They were under this arrange. ment, to treat rents received from these areas so allotted as representing their share of the profits in the village.

Under this arrangement Hanwant Singh and Raghuraj Singh or their predecessors were allotted an area of 18 bighas and 5 biswas as owners of a 4 annas share.

It is an admitted fact that the 27 bighas and 8 biswas, now in dispute, were allotted under the same arrangement to Talaiyar and his wife, Siddan Bibi, as owners of a 6 annas share.

In the year 1896 the 6 annas share belonging to Talaiyar and his wife, Siddan Bibi, was sold by auction and was bought by one Kalyan Chand who was the father in-law of the present plaintiff, Musammat Jhamola Kunwar,

The result of this auction sale was that the owners of this 6 annas share became ex-proprietary tenants of the 27 bighas and 8 biswas now in dispute.

After the share had been sold, Ahmad Yar, sen of Talaiyar and Siddan Bibi, made a mortgage, with possession of the plots making up the 27 bighas and 8 biswas. This mortgage was made in favour of Hanwant Singh and the father of Raghuraj Singh, and in the mortgage deed the property mortgaged was described as the ex-proprietary holding of the mortgagors.

As the result of these transactions, it must be taken that Kalyan Chand besame the owner of the 6 annas share which had former. ly belonged to Talaiyar and his wife. Ahmad and Musammat Siddan Bibi beeame the ex-proprietors of the 27 bighas 8 biswas and Han want Singh and the father of Righard Singh became the mortgagees of the exproprietary holding of Ahmad Yar and Siddan Bibi.

After this mortgage of the ex-proprietary bolding was made, Sumer Chand, son of Kalyan Chand, as the purchaser of a 6-sunsa share of Talaiyar and his wife, brought a suit to ejest the mortgagees was dismissed. It was held in that litigation that the 27 bighas and & biswas in dispute were the sir lands of Ahmad Yar and Siddan Bibi and that consequently Samer Chand was not entitled to get possession. This matter was decided by a decree of the District Judge passed in the year 1599.

Samer Chand being defeated in his suit for possession made an application to the Rent Uourts for assessment of rent on these as against Ahmad Yar. The ar lands result of this was that rent was assessed and consequently Sumer Chand and Ahmad Yar stood thereafter qui these sir lands in the relation of landlord and tenant.

In the year 1902 Hanwant Singh and the father of Raghuraj Singh brought a suit against Sumer Chand for profits arising out of these lands measuring 27 bights and and 8 bismas.

At the time this snit was brought, the position of Hanwant and the father of Ragburaj was this :-

(1) Tasy were the owners of a 4-annas share in the village.

(2) They had bought a 3 annas 4 pies share out of the remaining 12 annas share in the village and they were lesses of a l. anna 7-pies share out of this 12-annes share. JEANOLA KUNWAR C. HANWANT SINGH.

This share belonged to Alim-un-Nissa who had defaulted in payment of revenue. Her share was made over in form to Hanwant and the father of Ragburaj.

In the suit which Hanwant and the father of Raghuraj brought for profits they elaimed as being co-owners in the 12-annas share. Obviously they could bring no claim for profits regarding their 4-annas share, for that claim was barrel under the arrangement which had been some to between the parties in the year 1857. We have already observed that, under this latter arrangement, Hanwaut Singh and the predecessor of Raghuraj were in possession of 18 bighas 5 biswas of sir land.

This suit for profits was ultimately decided by Mr. Rustomji, the District Judge. He was of opinion that the plaintiffs in that suit were not entitled to any share of the profits arising out of this area of 27 bighas and 8 biswas. The Judge was of opinion that Khalil, whose share had been purchased by Hanwant and Raghuraj, and Musammut Alim un Nissa whose share was held by them in farm had lost all right to claim a share in the profits of this area.

In the year 1905 Sumer Chand, the son of Kalyan Chand, brought a suit for ejectment of Hanwaut Singh and Rabgaraj Singh as mortgagees of this ex-proprietary holding of 27 biglas 8 biswas. That suit was based upon an allegation that the ex-proprietor, Ahmad Yar, had relinquished his exproprietary helding. This suit, however, failed.

In the year 1:10 in execution of a decree for arrears of rent Musammat Ibamola Kunwar who had succeeded her husband, Sumer Chapd, ejected Amhad Yar, the ex-proprietor, and his mortgagees Hanwant Singh and Raghuraj Singh. The result of these proceedings was that the ex-proprietary tenancy came to an end and the plaintiff Jhamola Kunwar sot possession of the 27 bighas and 8 biswas.

We some now to the year 1913. In this year Hanwant and Raghuraj again brought a suit against Sumer Chand for profits. Mr. Daniels, the District Judge, before whom the case came in appeal, dismissed the suit, holding that the previous decision of Mr. Rustomji was rescudicata.

In the present suit which has been brought by Musammat Jhamole Kanwar for a deand & birgs, it has been held by the learned Jadge of the Court below that by reason of the decision of Mr. Rustomji which was accepted as res judicata by Mr. Daniels the defendants Han want Singh and Raghuraj Singh are not entitled to put forward any claim to a share as proprietors of this area of 27 bighas 8 biswas so far as they purport to hold a share in the 12. annas share other than the 4 annas share, which originally belonged to them.

In the appeals now before us the argument has been taken that the decision of the learned Additional Judge is erroneous, and that the question of title of Hanwant Singh and Ragharaj Singh to a share in the 27 b'ghas 8 biswas is not restudicata.

In our opinion the decision of the Court below is perfectly correct. Ordinarily the Rent Courts in this Province have no inrisdiction to determine questions of title but under the provisions of sections 193 and 201 of the Agra Tenancy Act, special jurisdiction has been conferred upon Rent Courts in virtue of which they are empowered, in given cirsumstances, to decide questions of title.

It has been repeatedly held by this Court that the desision of a Rent Court under section 199 in the exercise of its jurisdiction to deside a question of title is res judicata and will prevent the trial in a subsequent suit in Civil Court of any issue relating to the same proprietary right.

As pointed out by the learned Judge in the Court below, the rulings to this effect have been given with reference to the language of section 199, but on the same principles the same view of the law must be taken with regard to proceedings under section 201 in cases where under that section the Rent Court is given authority to decide questions of title.

Section 201 lays down that if in any suit instituted under the provisions of Chapter XI of the Act the plaintiff is not recorded as having any proprietary right entitling him to institute such suits and the defendant pleads that the plaintiff has not such properietary right, the Court shall proceed mutatic mutantic as directed in section 199. Sab section 3 of this section lays down that if the plaintiff is recorded as having such proprietary right, the Court shall presume that he has it, but that nothing in the sub-section shall affect the right of any person to establish by suit in the Civil Court that the plaintiff has not such proprietary right.

It follows from the terms of this section, therefore, that if the plaintiff in a suit for profits, which is a suit under the provisions of Chapter XI of the Ast, is recorded as having the proprietary right, the Rent Court must presume that he has got that right and decree the suit. The decision of the Rent Court, however, in these circumstances does not bar the defendant in the suit from going to a Civil Court and obtaining a declaration regarding his proprietary title.

In the other case provided for by this section, that is to say, where the plaintiff is not recorded as baving a proprietary right, the Rent Court is given the option of following one or other of the courses laid down in section 199, that is to say, the Rent Court may direct the plaintiff to go to a Civil Court within a given period and sue for declaration of his title or it may, if it so shoses, try the issue itself, and when it elects to pursue the course, the Rent Court is deemed to be a Civil Court competent to try this issue of proprietary right and its procedure is to be regulated in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In the litigation in the year 1902 which was terminated by the decree of Mr. Rustomji, the District Judge, it appears to us that the Rent Court exercised right of trying the issue regarding the proprietary title. So far as we are able to ascertain from the judgment (and that is the only dosument which is before us). the case was a case in which the plaintiffs there were not recorded as having proprictary right entitling them to institute the suit. We gather from what is set out in Mr. Rustomji's judgment that at that time this area of 27 bighas and 8 biswas was recorded in the name of Ahmed Yar who was described as the ex-proprietor of the lands in question, Later on in 1913 when Hanwant and Raghuraj again attempted to sue for profite, this decision of Mr. Rustomji's was held to be res udicata, and we think rightly so.

It follows from all this that we must held that in the present suit the learned Judge of the Court below was right in saying that the claim of Hanwant Singh and Raghoraj Singh to a share of these 27 bighos and 3 biswos is untenable to the extent that they represent the share of Khalil which they purchased in the 12. annas share which was outside own share of 4-annas. In the concluding portion of his judgment the learned Judge states the position very elearly. He holds that in so far as Hanwant and Ragburaj claimed to represent by purchase the share of Kbalil, and in so far as they represent Alim.un. Nissa as lessees, they are estopped from maintaining now that they have any interest as co-sharers, left in the property in suit. The learned Judge, however, has made it clear that so far as their original 4 annas share is concerned, they are not so estopped.

The Cross Appeal No. 805 of 1920 appears to us to have no force. The contention in this appeal appears to be that inasmuch as the question of title to the 27 bighas and 8 biswas has been held by the lower Court to be res judicata between the parties, the position is that Musammat Jhamola Kunwar is entitled to the exclusive right over this area, and that in making the partition of this village she is entitled to keep this area in addition to the share which would be allotted to her in proportion to the interest which she holds in the village. In our opinion that contention sannot be maintained for the reasons we have stated The decision which is res judicota between the parties is a decision only as against Hanwant Singh and Raghoraj to the extent to which they represent the shares of Khalil and Alim un Nissa. There is nothing in the previous litigation between the parties which would prevent Hanwart and Ragburaj from claiming in the partition that they were entitled to their full share of the village lands in proportion to their original share of 4 arnas which they have had all along.

Judge has rightly held that no question of res judicata can arise as against her. She was no party to the suit which was decided by Mr. Rustomji, and as the learned Judge properly observes, a lessor doss not claim under his lessee.

The result of all this is that we find the decision of the lower Appellate Court to be perfectly correct. We dismiss both the appeals with costs in each case to the respondents on the higher scale. In Second Appeal No. 805 separate sets of costs will be awarded to (1) Hanwant Singh and Raghuraj Singh and (2) Ataullah, defendant-respondent. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale, if any.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1837), s. 59—Succession to occupancy tenancy, how governed.

Succession to an occupancy tenancy is governed not by Customary Law but by the provisions of section 59 of the Tenancy Act, and unless a plaintiff can prove that the land was occupied by the common ancestor, he has no locus standi to contest an alienation by the widow of an occupancy tenant, because he is not her heir and is in no botter position than any stranger, even though he may be a collateral of her deceased husband; so far as he is concerned, the consent or otherwise of the landlords is immaterial.

Bakbshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT,—Musammat Toti, who inherited an ossupancy tenancy from her husband,

Kirpa, gifted the property to her illegitimate

Kirpa, Amar Singh, who obtained a mutation,

The present suit was instituted by one Maluka who alleged that he was a collateral of Kirpa descended from a common ancestor who occupied the land and, therefore, claimed a declaration that the alienation by Musimmat Toti should not affect his reversionary rights after her death.

The First Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the property in suit was occupied by the common ancestor of himself and

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge who held that the plaintiff was a collateral of Kirpa and without coming to any finding on the question whether the land was occupied by the common ancestar—a point, which in his opinion, did not arise—decreed the claim on the ground that Musammat Toti baving only a limited estate could not alienate except for necessity unless she obtained the consent of all the landlords.

Musammat Toti and her son have now preferred a second appeal to this Court. The District Judge apparently failed to understand that succession to an oscupancy tenancy is governed not by Oustomary Law but by the provisions of section 59 of the Tenancy Act, and that unless the plaintiff ean prove that the land was occupied by the common ancestor, he has no locus standi to contest an alienation by the widow of an pecupancy tenant, basanse he is not her heir and is in no better position than any stranger, even though he may be a collaterel of her deseased husband; so far as he is conserned, the consent or other wise of the landlords is immaterial.

We allow the appeal, and as the District Judge has some to no finding on the question whether the common ancestor occupied the land, remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, Oivil Procedure Code, to the District Judge for disposal according to law. Ocats will be costs in the cause.

JUDGMENT

WALSE, J .- This is an appeal from an order of remand. The suit is brought by certain alleged minors through the guardianship of their mother in an effort to redeem property which has been already sold over their heads as the result of a decree for sale obtained in a suit by the mortgagee against their father, the original mortgagor. It has the aspects of being a proceeding of a somewhat suspicious character, but nonetheless these surpicions have to be confirmed and not inferred. In some respects the attempt which they have made resembles the case referred to in the judgment of the Court below, namely, Ganpat Lal v. Bindbasini Frashad Narayan Singh (1), where the Privy Conneil pointed out that after the sale has taken place, (they are speaking of a mortgage), the owner holds as purchaser and is entitled to raise all the defences belonging to him as such, and unless the elaim to set aside the sale is made in a astion and properly properly constituted raised in suitable pleadings in that action, the Court cannot interfere with the posses. sion given to him by his purchase. 47 O. 824 (P. C.).

for liberty to amend their pleadings, so as to challenge the sale, very much on the lires of their Lordships' opinion which I have just quoted. The First Court refused leave to amend. There was an appeal from that order, and, as the order was unaprealable, the appeal was not unnaturally dismissed. One of the points orged upon us by the appellants is that the question of amendment has been concluded by that unsuccessful appeal. We do not agree with that. We think it is one of those eases which section 105 provides for, namely, where there is some unappealable interlegatory order, its irregularity or any de'est in it, may be raised when the decree is appealed from, so far as it affects the decision of the ease. There is no doubt that the refusal to amend affected the decision of the plaintiffs' case by shutting them out from the alternative elaim which the Privy Council has pointed out is really a condition precedent. We entirely agree with the general observations of the lower Appellate Court in reference to the refusal to amend. Whatever the merits of the case may be, which is sought to be made out, it is just one of those cases in which the Court ought to allow amendment, if it is satisfied that the application is made bong fide. As the lower Appellate Court says, it would not aller the nature of the suit, to use a somewhat popular but vague expression, because the original prayer and the amended prayer stand together and one leads to the other and the new prayer would be a new and additional elaim, but not an irconsistent one. The order for remand was, therefore, right. We would further point out that it still remains to be desided whether the sale ought to be set aside. That derends on two questions. First, whether the minors are really the persons who ought to have impleaded at all. Their claim to have been impleaded arises out of a deed of wakf subsequent in date to the mortgage deed of which the mortgagees apparently were not in the least aware. As is pointed out in Mr. Agarwala's notes to the Code, it is by no means clear that, although the final provision which used to be contained in section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act has been removed, rule I of Order XXXIV which has taken the place of section to means anything more than BEANKER LAL C. MURAMMAD AMIN.

that the defendant orght to raise the question whether all the parties have been properly impleaded. If the plaintiff omits to do so, and the plaintiff can hardly do so if he has no knowledge of the existence of the persons alleged to be interested, it does not nessessarily follow that the desres is not binding where the defendant, in the interest of the person who subsequently complains, (in this case it is merely the case of a father and his minor children), abstains from raising the objection. Secondly, there is the further question, whether on the form of the deed, the present minor plaintiffs had any interest in the equity of redemption. The deed does not, in my opinion, purport to be a transfer of the property to them. It is a declaration of trust vest ing in them a contingent future interest subject to their father's life, and, as a matter of strict interpretation, it is to my mind doubtful whether they were persons who had an interest in the equity of redemption at the time of the suit so as to make them persons contemplated by this rule. Thirdly, the question will have to be decided whether the suit, including the application for amendment, are honestly brought. The deed of wakf is subsequent in date to the mortgage. The existence of the decree and the sale of the property were ignored. It is possible that the pardanashin guardian of the two minors knew nothing about them, and that their Pleader only learnt the existence of the sale and the decree from the written statement. That opens up the question whether they knew anything about the mortgage either. If they knew nothing of the decree and the sale, it is probable that they knew nothing about the mortgage, and, therefore, the question will have to be considered, whether this suit is really a suit brought by the minors through their guardian in the honest assertion of their natural rights and in order to test this question, or whether it is a cham suit brought in their names by the father in order further to re-open the litigation which has already taken place and has been decided against him. Upon this question it is to be borne in mind that the deed of waif which has been read to un recognises the existence of the mortgage. That is a point which might possibly, when the matter somes to be fully considered, out both ways, and shows that the existence of the mortgage was not concealed. On the other hand, it rather indicates that the security for the was excluded from mortgage-debt operation of the trust. I have eaid this much because I think it possible that the order of remand will not result in anything substantial to the plaintiffs; although I recognise that it is still an open question, but it is obvious that when the amendment is allowed, the nature of the suit is altered to this extent that it will require a re settlement of a large number of issues, some of which I have already indicated in the observations I have made in the scuree of this judgment. I would accordingly dismiss the appeal and would modify the order of the Court below as regards costs to this extent that I direct the ecess in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court to abide the result of the amended suit.

Rives, J.—I agree with the order proposed, but the suit must be tried out on the merits. I express no opinion as to the interpretation, validity or effect of the wild deed or as to the bona fides of the plaintiffs or any body else connected with this litigation. These are all matters which have to be decided on evidence which has not yet been produced on either side.

EYTHE OCCRT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is dismissed, the order of remand confirmed, and the emendment as directed by the lower Appellate Court must be allowed by the Trial Court. But this involves, and we direct, that the defendant must be allowed to make such amendments in his written statement as are rendered necessary by the amendment in the plaint, and both parties must be allowed to produce any material evidence with regard to the amended claim. The costs in the lower Court and in this Court up to date will abide the result of the suit.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1903), O. XLI, rr. 23, 24, 25 - Suit decided on merits - Appellate Court, whether can remand under r. 23 - Procedure.

Where a Trial Court has decided a suit on the merits, it is not open to an Appellate Court to remand the case under rule 23 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code as though the suit has been decided on a preliminary point but it should take the coarse indicated in rule 24 or the course indicated in rule 25.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, 24 Parganas, dated the 4th of April 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, Third Court at Alipur, dated the 28th of August 1919.

FACIS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Kanai Lal Fol), on behalf of the Respondents, took a preliminary objection that no appeal lay as the order of remand was not under rule 23 of Order XL!, Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Mohendra Nath Ray, (with him Babu Kanai Lal Pal), for the Appellant, submitted that though the Trial Court had disposed of the suit on the merits, still the lower Appellate Court remanded the whole suit as though it had been decided on a preliminary point. The Appellate Court should have dealt with the case under any of the other provisions of Order XLI, which might be applicable, rule 25 for instance. In such cases, where an order of remand has been erroneously made under rule 23, it has been held that an appeal would lie.

[RICHARDSON, J.—We shall treat the order as one made under rule 23, and then send the case back to be dealt with under rule 25 or rule 24]

JUDGMENT —This appeal is from an order of remand dated 11th April 1921. We refrain at this stage from dealing with the question of law discussed by the learned Judge in his judgment. It is sufficient now to say that we cannot resist the contention urged for the appellants, that the Trial Court having decided the suit on the merits, it was not open to the learned Judge to remand the case under rule 23, of Order XLI, as though the suit had been decided on a preliminary point. The learned Judge should have taken the course indicated in rule 24 or the course indicated in rule 25.

AHMAD BARHSH U. PALI

We may explain that we do not deal with the question discussed by the learned Judge because it is unnecessary at the present stage to do so, and at a later stage when the outstanding issues have been desided it may still be unnecessary to deal with that question.

We may further say that orders of remand made by lower Appellate Courts in eases which do not fall within rule 23 of Order XLI are likely to lead to difficulty and unnecessary discussion in view of the provision contained in clause (2) of section 105 of the Code.

We set aside the order of remand and direct that the case be remitted to the lower Appellate Court in order that the appeal thereto may be further dealt with and disposed of according to law, costs of this appeal to abide the result, hearing fee one gold mohur.

Kunwar Dalip Singh, for the Appellant. Mr. Abdul Rasay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT,-In this case the plaintiff sued for the removal of a new parnala put up by the defendant. The claim was dismissed by the First Court which held the parnala to be an old one. The District Judge also held the parmals to be old and plaintiff-appellant's dismissed the Against this he has preferred a second appeal and it is urged that there is no finding that defendant had proved any easement in respect of this piralia. Counsel for the respondent admits this to be correct. The mere finding that a parala is old is no finding in law that an essement has been established with respect thereto. I am, therefore, compalled to remand the ease to the lower Appellate Court for a desision on the merits whether the defendant had acquired a right of easement in respect of the parnals in dispute. Costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause.

Article 46 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act has no application to an order made under section 41 of the Bengal Survey Act. [p. 925, col. 1.]

It is contrary to sound canons of construction to enlarge the scope of the provisions of a Statute of Limitation, by importing into them words which are not to be found there. [p. 924, col. 2.]

There is no inflexible rale that a Survey map must have preference over a Thak map. The Thak and the Survey maps should, as a rule, agree, where they differ, the one that more nearly agrees with the local landmarks is the one which should be followed. There is no general or definite rule making it incumbent upon the Court to follow either the one or the other, the Court may, if it considers the Thak map more reliable, follow that in preference to the Survey map. Where the Thak proceedings and the decision of a dispute took place in the presence of the predecessors of the parties to a suit, that map must be treated as valuable evidence in the suit between the successors of the persons who were present. [p. 927 col, 1.

Where lands are submerged every year during the rainy season, acquisition of title to them by adverse possession is impossible. [p. 927, col. 2]

Where the land is submerged, the possession of the adverse holder ceases and the possession of the true owner constructively revives, so that while the land remains submerged, whether for a year or a month, no possession can be deemed to continue in the wrong-doer so as to be available towards the ultimate acquisition of title against the true owner. [p. 928, col. 1.]

Adverse possession must be possession adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent of area, in order that it may be effective to destroy the title of the true owner. [p. 928, col. 1.]

Possession to be adverse must be actual, visible, exclusive and hostile, and a distinction must be made between continuous adverse occupation and isolated acts of trespass. [p. 928, cols. 1 & 2.]

The doctrine of constructive possession cannot be applied in favour of a wrong-doer, where possession must be confined to actual possession, that is to say, if he relies on adverse possession, he can succeed only as regards the portion of the land in suit of which he proves actual possession for the statutory period. [p. 928, col. 2.]

A suit must be deemed to have been instituted on the date when the plaint was filed in Court and not on the date when it was ordered to be registered.

MAHARAJA OF COOCH-BEHAR U. MAHENDRA RANJAN BAI CHAUDHURI.

Babas Dwarks Nath Chuckerbutty and Kali Kinkar Chuckerbutty, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.-The subject matters of the litigations which have led up to these two appeals are two tracts of land in the District of Jalpaignri. The rival claimants are the Raja of Kakina and the Maharaja of Cooch-Behar. The lands, which have been formed by the resession of the river Snaniajan, are claimed by the former as included in his village Sibram and by the latter as comprised in his village Jamgram. The first suit was instituted in the Court of the Munsif of Jalpaiguri and the second in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the same District; but the former suit was transferred, for the sake of convenience, to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and the two suits were tried together on the same evidence. The suits were ultimately decreed in part on the basis of a report made by a Civil Court Amin. decrees made by the Subordinate Judge have been assailed in this appeal, substantially on four grounds, namely, firet, that the suits were barred by the three years rule of limitation under Articles 46 and 47 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act; secondly, that the trial of the sait instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge is barred by the provisions of Order 11, rule 2 (2) of the Oivil Procedure Code; thirdly, that the boundary between the two villages has not teen correctly ascertained; and fourthly, that the defendants have acquired a statutory title by adverse possession for more than twelve years.

In support of the first ground, reliance has been placed as well upon Article 46 as upon Article 47. Article 46 provides that a suit by a party bound by such award, that is, an award mentioned in Article 45, to recover any property comprised therein must be instituted within three years from the date of the final award or order. The awards mentioned in

Article 45 are awards under the Bengal Land Revenue Settlement Regulation, 1822, the Bengal Land Revenue Settlement Regulation, 18/5 and the Bengal Land Revenue Regulation, 1833. It is not disputed that in the cases before us there is no award under any of three Regulations mentioned. What is set up as a bar is an order under section 41 of the Bengal Survey Act, 1875, made on the 1Cth June 1912 by an Assistant Superintendent of Survey. That order is of no assi-tance to the appellants for two reasons. In the first place, the order is not an award under any of the three Regulations mentioned. The nature of a possessory order under section 34 of Regulation VII of 1822 was explained by the Judicial Committee in Jovala Buksh v. Dharum Singh (1) and heigh Sahib Ferhlad Sein v. Rajender Kishore sing (2) and need not be investigated here. it be someeded that a possessory order under section 40 (1) of the Bengal Survey Act, 1875, bears an analogy to a desision under section 34 of Regulation VII of 1822; it would still be contrary to sound sanons of construction to enlarge the scope of the provisions of a Statute of Limitations, by importing into them words which are not to be found there. An attempt of this description was made in the cases of Ibrahim Ali v. Hadi Ali (3), Sheo Das v. Benihu (4) and Zamulabdin v. Durg: Dai (5), when it was argued that an order or award under the N. W. P. Land Revenue Act, 1873, which was similar in scope to the Regulations, attracted the operation of Article 45, even though that Statute was not one of the three Regulations expressly mentioned. This contention was rightly overruled, for extension by analogy is elearly not permissible in such a sace. A similar view was adopted in Oodey Singh v. Paluck Singh (6) where the three years rule was attempted to be made applicable to an order of a Collector in partition proceedings. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Boj th Sahib Perhiad Bein v. Rojender Kishore Sing (21 does not militate against this view, as the order in that case was in essence made under Regulation IX of 1825. In the second place, as pointed out in Babu Kasturi Singh v. Kajkumar Babu Bissun Pragus Narain Singh (7), a decision under the Bengal Survey Act, relating to a boundary dispute, was conclusive as to possession only, and would not bar a suit for recovery of To the same possession based on title. effect is the decision in Bisseswari Koer v. Ram Protap Singh (:). A Similar view had previously been adopted in Mouffur Ali v. Grish Chunder Doss (9) where the three years rule was considered inapplicable to a suit for resovery of possession upon establish. ment of title. We are of opinion that these suits cannot be treated as barred by limitation under Article 46, merely because when they were instituted more than three years had elapsed from the date of the order under section 41 of the Bengal Survey Act. That order has, until reversed or modified by competent authority. the force of an order of a Civil Court deslaring the parties to be in possession of the land in assordance with the boundary as determined by the Collector. Article 47 is equally of no avail to the appellants. That article provides that a suit by any person bound by an order respecting the possession of immoveable property made under the Criminal Procedure Code, 1893, or by any one elaiming under such person, to recover the property comprised in such order, must be instituted within three years from the date of the final order in the ease. In respect of the land comprised in the first suit, an order under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code was made on the 15th May 1912. The plaint in that suit was lodged in Court on the 14th May 1915, as was found on an examination of the original document. There was some question as to the verification which had been made by the reargnised agent of the Raja of Kakina, the first plaintiff, on the 12th May 1.15. On the 17th May, order was resorded that the agent be permitted to sign and verify the plaint which was thereupon directed to registered. It is obvious that the suit must be deemed to have been instituted the date when the plaint filed Was in Court and not on the date when it was ordered to be registered. was no defeat in the verification; even if there had been a defect, the Court could allow an amendment at any stage; such amendment would not have made the suit open to objection on the ground of limitation : Rojit Ram v. Katesar Nath (10); Fateh Chand v. Mansab Rai (11); Bisheshar Nath v. Emperor (12); Basiles v. John Smidt (13), Mohni Mohun Das v. Bungsi Budlan Saha Das (14). As regards the second suit which was instituted on the 24th February 1916, the order under section 145, Criminal Prosedure Code, in respect of the land ecmprised therein, was made on the 2nd June 1913. Consequently both the suits fulfil the requirements of Article 47, if that article be assumed to be applicable. The objection of limitation consequently proves untenable in both its branches.

In support of the second ground, reliance has been placed upon Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. That rule provides as follows:

"(1) Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court.

(2) Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished."

It is plain that if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the first suit, the subsequent suit is not barred. What the rule requires is that every suit shall include the whole of the elaim arising from one and the same cause of action and not that every suit shall include every claim or every cause of action which the plaintiff may have against the defendant. Pittapur Ra a v. Suriya Rau (15); Amanat Bibi v. Imdad Husain (16); Hanuman Komat v. Hanuman Muniur (17); Saminothan Ohetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (18). the eases before us, the two tracts of land were distinct; it is conceivable that the elaim of the plaintiff to one of the tracts might be well-founded while the other might be groundless; and evidence appropriate for the one might not be relevant for the other; Sonu Khushal Khadake v. Bahiniba: Krishna (19). The parties also were not entirely identical; the Maharaja Coosb-Behar, for instance, was a party to the second suit but not to the first. The dispute as to possession had taken place at different times and the orders under section 145 had been made on different dates separated by an interval of more than one year. In such circumstances, the causes of action might reasonably be considered distinct; they were clearly not unified by the fact that the Assistant Superintendent of Surveys included both the tracts in one order. We must look to the substance and not to the form of the proceedings; if he had recorded his decision in separate orders, the contention of the defendants would have lost all semblance of the reasonableness. It is consequently needless to attempt a definition of the expression "sause of action" or Murti v. Bhola Ram (20) and Binde Bibi v. Kam Chandra (21), where a distinction was drawn between properties held by different persons under different titles and properties held by the same person though under different titles. We are of opinion that in the case before us, the second suit is not barred under Order II, rule 2, and the plaintiff cannot be said, in the events which have happened, to have split up one entire cause of action into different fragments.

In support of the third ground, the appellants have advanced a two-fold argument, namely, first, that preference should not have been given to the Thak map over the Survey map, and, secondly, that the boundary line, between the villages of S.bram and Jamgram, as depicted on the Thak maps produced, is incorrect. No objection, we may add, has been taken to the assuracy of the work of the Civil Court Amin who prepared the ease map in these litigations. As regards the first branch of the contention, it is sufficient to observe that there is no inflexible rule that a Survey map must have preference over a Thak Map. As observed in Abid Hossein v. Dowcurry Pal (22) the Thak and the Survey maps should, as a rule, agree, where they differ, the one that more nearly agrees with the local landmarks is the one which should be followed. There is no general or definite rule making it incumbent upon the Court to follow either the one or the other, the Court may, if it considers the Thak map more reliable, follow that in preference to the Survey map. This view is not opposed to the decision in Burn v. Achumbit Roy (23) and was approved in the cases of Nawab Badadur of Murshidabad v. Gopinath Mandal (24) and Amrita Sundari v. Sherajul. din Ahamed (25). In the case before us, there are solid grounds for the preference given to the Thak map. The Thak map of Sibram was prepared on the 25th June 1856; the survey operations were conducted during the season 1857 58. In the interval, there was a dispute between the proprietors of the neighbouring estates as to the correctness of the boundary as delineated on the Thak map. The dispute was decided by a Deputy Collector on the 14th December 1857, when it was ordered "to confirm the Thak, under which balf of the flowing river (Shanisjan) appertains to this Mouza (Sibram) and the other half to Jamgram." An entry to this effect war, after the desision of the dispute by the Thakbast Deputy Collector, made op the Thak map. The Thak proceedings and the decision of the dispute took place in the presence of the predecessors of the parties to these suite, and, consequently, that map must be treated as valuable evidence in a suit between the successors of the persons who were present. Dunne v. Diarani Kanta Lahiri (26) which is not only in conformity with the decisions in Collector of Ra shahye v. Doorga Loondurses Debia (27), Gunga Narain V. Radhika Mohun Roy (28), Omirta Iall v. Kales Perchad (29), Nobo Coomar Gobind Chunder Roy (30), Joytara Dassee v. Mahomed Mobaruck (31) and Abdul Hamid v. Kiran Chandra Rcy (32) but is also in harmony with the pronouncement of the Jadieial Committee in Surja Kanta v. Sarat Chandra Foy (33). The decision of the Mevenue Authorities was neither ex parie nor without any enquiry, as appears to have happened in the case of Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (34), and, in such circumstances, the application of an abnormally exacting test of assuracy was depressied by the Judicial Committee in Monmohini Debi v. R. Watson & Co. (35). We sannot, sonsequently, give effect to the contention of the appellants that the Survey map should have been preferred to the Thak map.

As regards the second branch of the conten- , tion of the appellants, in connection with this . point, it has been arged that the boundary shown on the Thak map is inaccurate and does not in fact give effect to the decision of the Revenue Authories that the true boundary is peither the one nor the other back of the river but is an imaginary line midway between the two banks. This argument seemed at one stage to have an appearance of plausibility, but, upon eloser examination, turned out to be unfounded. It is negatived, in fact, by the entry on the Thak map which was made in the presence of the agents of the rival proprietors who had estates on the river banks, The entry is unambiguous and states distinct. ly that the Thak boundary line was kept intact as drawn, and half of the disputed river was shown as within the ambit of Mouza Sibram. while the other half was within the ambit of Mooza Jamgram. If the boundary as delineated on the Thak map was in fact incorrect, the entry would have been made in different terms. We are of opinion that there is no reasonable doubt as to the meaning of the entry and that the defendants have failed to give adequate reasons why that ertry should be disturbed after it had been aequiesced in by all the parties interested for such a length of time. We hold accordingly that the Subordinate Judge has rightly held that the common boundary line is that shown on the map,

In support of the fourth ground, the. defendants have urged that they have acquired a good title by adverse possession for the statutary period. Here the case of the defendants is beset with grave difficulties as the major portion of the disputed lands is unsulturable sandy waste. The defendants. have, consequently, concentrated their efforts upon two parcels kha and ga. The latter parcel is said to have been cultivated by one Masu; there is no reliable svidence. however, that his possession extended beyond ten years before the institution of the suit; such occupation is clearly inadequate for the. purpose of acquisition of title by adverse possession. The former plot is said to have been held by one Khada who admitted in eross examination that the lands were submerged every year during the rainy season. In such eirenmetaness, acquisition of title by adverse possession is impossible. In the MANARAJA OF COOCH-BEHAR C. MABEEDRA RANJAN BAI CHAUDEURI.

OARO of Secretary of State v Krishanmoni Gupta (33) Lord Davey referred to the decision in Trustees and Agency Co. v. Short (3) in support of the view that land after submersion besomes dereliet, and so long as it remains submerged. no title can be made against the true owner. This view was affirmed in Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of 'tite (38) where Lord Sumper observed that no rational distinction sould be drawn between submergence for a few years and submergence for a few months, and that the principle enunciated in the earlier decision was applicable where the re flooding was seasonal and occurred for several months in each year. When the land is re-submerged, the possession of the adverse holder ceases and the possession of the true owner constructively revives, so that while the land remains submerged, whether for a year or a month, no possession can be deemed to continue in the wrong-doer so as to be available towards the ultimate acquisition of title against the true owner. This view destroys the foundation of the title possession set up by the by adverse defendants. We may add that the defendants claimed title by adverse possession not always by occupation and cultivation, but sometimes also by recovery of jalkar khutagiri dces; the former and dues shape of levy of money or took the share of fish from fishermen who saught fish in submerged areas; the latter assumed the form of levy from boatmen during rainy season tied their boats to pegs driven into the bank. These acts cannot be treated as adverse possession, which, as explained by Lord Robertson in Radhamoni Debi v. Collector of Khulna (39), must be possession adequate in continuity, in publicity, and in extent of area, in order that it may be effective to destroy the title of the true Possession to be adverse must be actual, visible, exclusive and hostile, and a distinction must be made between con. tipuose adverse occupation and isolated acts of trespace. To use the language of Bramwell, L. J. in Leigh v. Jack (40) which is quoted with approval by Lord Sumner in Basanta Kumar Roy v Secretary of State (33) to defeat a title by dispessession of the true owner, asts must be done which are inconsistent with his enjoyment of the soil for the purposes for which he intended to use it, and, therefore, it is necessary to look at the position in which the true owner stands towards the land as well as to the acts done by the alleged discosses. sor. There is this additional difficulty in the case before as that even if the acts mentioned could be treated as acts of adverse possession, there is no evidence to show that the spots where the acts were exercised (for instance, where the fish was caught or the boats were moored) were identical from year to year. Indeed, as the land was periodically submerged, attempt at identification would fruitless. In this connection, it is in portant to bear in mind that the dostrine of constructive possession cannot be applied in favour of a wrong doer, whose possession must be confined to actual possession, that is to say, if he relies on adverse posses. sion, he can succeed only as regards the portion of the land in suit of which he proves actual possession for the statutory period; Mohini Mohan Ray v. Iromoda Nath Roy (41) approved by the Judicial Committee in Bosanta Kumar Roy v. Secret ry of State (38). From whatever point of view the claim of the defendants as to acquisition of title by adverse possession is approached, it is thus found to be beset with insuperable difficulties and cannot consequen ly prevail,

The result is that the decrees made by the Subordinate Judge are affi med and the appeals dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee in First Appeal No. 93 of 1920 at one gold mobur.

JUDGMENT .- There is no force in this appeal. The judgment debtor possessory mortgagee whose rights and interests as such were sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent and purchased by the appellant. The judgment-debtor applied under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Ucde of Civil Procedure to set aside the sale and deposited the amount mentioned in the proclamation of sale with the necessary penalty wi bin the time allowed The Court executing the decree held that Order XXI, rule 89, of the Code was not applicable and refused to set aside the sale, but the lower Appellate Court relying on the principle of the desision in Manilal Banchhed v. Motibhai Hemabhai (1) otherwise.

The auction-purchaser has filed this appeal. But no appeal can lie from an appellate order, setting saids a sale, because section 104, sub section (1), clause (1), (1) 10 Ind, Cas. 812; 85 B. 288; 13 Bom, L. R. 283, read with Order XLIII, clause (1) of the Oode allows only a single appeal from the order passed by the Court executing the decree of the kind referred to therein. Section 104, sub section (2), clearly says that no appeal shall lie from any order passed in appeal under that section. In Asimuddi Sheskh v. Sundari Bibee (2) it was held in somewhat similar circumstances that no second appeal lay from an appeallate order in a case of that kind.

The learned Counsel for the appellant requests that the appeal might be treated as an application for revision. Bat even if that were to be permitted, there is no ground for interference because a possessory mortgagee holds an interest in immoveable property sufficient to justify the application of Order XXI, rule 89, of the Oode of Civil Procedure to his case. The decision in Shah Mohammai Yusuf v. Lichhmi Nurain (3) relates to a case of a simple mortgage and is distinguishable from the decision in Manilal Ranc'shod v. Mottbhai Hemabiai (1) on which the lower Appellate Court relied.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with premises of his own, by ejectment of a tenant there. from, a space equal to the space previously rented by him, and it is not within the jurisdiction of a Court to decide upon the amount of space which would be adequate for the purposes of the business.

Appeal against the decision of the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Bombay, in Suits Nos. 4338 and 4339 of 1920.

Mr. D. R. Patwardhan, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed this suit in the Small Causes Court to eject his tenants (the defendants) from certain shops in Lamington Road belonging to him which he wished to use for his own purposes. plaintiff had previously rented certain premises in Hornby Road, the floor space of which was 2000 square feet. He had to vacate these premises and consequently he wanted to occupy his own premises in order to store his goods and expose them for sale. It is not suggested that he is asking the Court to eject the defendants from a greater space than the space he occupied in the premises he rented in the Hornby Road. But the learned Judge considered that it was for him to decide how the plaintiff's business should be sarried on and what amount of space in the plaintiff's premises would be adequate for that purpose. He thought that it would not be profitable to the plaintiff if he occupied the whole of the premises, and so he ordered that the plaintiff should only get possession of a part, as it might take time to accustom the population of that locality to purchase the kind of goods which the plaintiff was selling. As a result he held that the space which was occupied by the defendants in this suit was not reasonably required for the plaintiff's use.

Now we do not say that there may be cases in which if a plaintiff doing business in rented premises on a small wanted to occupy premises of his which were far larger than those rented by him, the Court would not have power to decide that the plaintiff was asking more space than was reasonably required. But in this case the plaintiff is not asking for more space than he had previously been in occupation of for the purpose of his business. It is true he had to move from one part of the city to another. But in our cpinion the plaintiff was the person to decide whether he should occupy as much or less space for his business in his own premises. There was nothing unreasonable in his thirking that the goods which be had stored in the premises in Hornby Road sould, with equal advantage, be stored in the premises in Lamington Road. If he had been asking the Court to give him an ejectment order against tenants occupying a far greater space than he had ccoupied in the rented premises, then to doubt it might have been a different matter. It seems to us that to prevent the plaintiff from occupying a space in his own premises equal to the space previously rented by him on the ground stated by the learned Judge would be going entirely beyond the jurisdiction of the Court in cases falling under the Rent Act. We make the Rule ab. solute.

There will be a decree for possession with. in one month of the service of this order on the occupants of the shop with costs throughout.

Consideration, portion of, for legal necessity, effect of-Family benefited, effect of-Antecedent debt—Usufructuary mortgage creating personal liability, whether antecedent debt.

Where a sale deed, although jointly executed by the heads of all the branches of a family, mentions the purpose for which the sale was made, there is no room for raising any presumption with regard to legal necessity for the transaction. The Court has merely to examine whether that purpose is one which Hindu Law recognises as valid. [p. 933, col. 1.]

Balvant Santaram v. Babaji, 8 B. 602 at p. 609; 9 Ind. Jur. 217; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 778, considered.

Where it is found that a portion of the sale consideration was taken by a father for legal necessity and that the family benefited by the transaction to that extent, the sons can recover the property sold only by re-paying the said portion of the sale-consideration. [p. 234, col. I.]

In order to validate a transaction entered into by a father in consideration of antecedent debt, there must be not only antecedency in time but also true dissociation in fact. Once it is proved that the sale took place in consideration of such antecedent debt, the sons are precluded from attacking it, but they are not precluded from raising the prior question whether the sale really was in consideration of such a debt. [p. 933, col. 2; p. 934, col. 1.]

A clause in a deed of usufructuary mortgage executed by a father, making the mortgagor personally liable for the mortgage money in case the mortgagee be dispossessed from the mortgaged property, does not constitute a personal liability such as may be treated as antecedent debt. [p. 983, col. 1.]

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivestava, for Respondent No. 3 in Appeal No. 183.

JUDGMENT.—These three connected appeals arise out of three separate Suits Nov. 10 of 1919, 243 of 1919 and 118 of 1919 instituted in the Court of the Munsif of Sultanpur. These suits were brought respectively by the sons of Salig Ram, Ram Ghulam and Mahabir, three brothers, to set aside cer'ain transfers made by the three brothers jointly and to recover their respective shares in the joint family property. The following pedigres will show the position of the parties.

The sons of Salig Ram and a transferee from them were plaintiffs in Suit No. 10 of 1919. Gur Prasad and a transferee from him named Mazhar Husain were plaintiffs in Suit No. 246 of 1919. The two sons of Mahabir and the same Mazhar Husain as transferee were plaintiffs in Suit No. 118 of 1919.

MANZUPAN BIBI D. JANEI PRASAD.

The suits have already been before this Court in appeal. Ram Charan was a grantee whose name was included in List Vi of the lists prepared under Act I of 1859. The suits were originally dismissed on the ground that his sons held the property as absolute proprietors with full power of disposal. This finding was upheld by the lower Appellate Court. On appeal to this Court it was held that "the property deseended to Ram Charan's sons in the same way and subject to the same rights as if it had been the self acquired property of Ram Charan under Hindu Law. As soon as the grandeons of Ram Charan in the male line were borr, they became co heirs with their fathers." The appeals were, therefore, remanded to the lower Appellate Court for desision of the remaining issues under Order 1V, rule 23.

learned Subordinate Judge bas decided Suit No. 10 of 1919 wholly and Suit No. 246 of 1919 mainly in favour of the plaintiffs. In the latter case he made the decree for possession of the one sixth share elaimed, subject to payment of one sixth of a sum of Rs. 521 which he found to be binding on the plaintiffs. These desisions passed on 23rd December 1920. The third suit has been wholly dismissed. The appeal in this suit was decided by the learned Subordinate Judge on 9th April 1921 and he took a different view of the law from that which he had taken in deciding the appeals in the connected suits. He held on the authority of two Beach rulings of this Court, apparently were not eited before which him in the earlier cases, that the suit was barred by the principle that when once joint family property has passed out of the family under a sale executed to satisfy a previously existing debt, the sons could only question it by showing that the debt was either illegal or immoral. The rulings of this Court to which reference has been made gave effect to a principle long ago laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council.

of 1921 is a sale deed executed on 10th July 1903 in favour of persons who are now represented by the appellants Musammat Manzaran Bibi, Muhammad Ibrahim and Musammat Kariman for a sum of Rs. 5,500 made up as follows:—

	Rs.
Payable to Har Charan Das	. 10
under prior mortgages	4,700
Payable to Musammat Bhagwan
Dei under a prior mort.	****
gage	600
Paid in cash for expenses of sale, ets	200
TOTAL	5,500

None of the younger sons of Salig Ram were born on the date of the alienation and there was a question in the Courts below whether the eldest, Janki Prasad, was born. This point has now been decided in his favour, and as it is a finding of fact the decision is final. The appellants contest the decision of the Court below on two main grounds.

The first is the plea which has been accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge in the later suit, namely, that when once property has passed away from the family under a sale to pay off previously existing debt, the sons can only challenge it by showing that the bebt in question was of an illegal or immoral character. This issue is common to all the three appeals.

The second ground is that the mortgages which were paid off by means of the saledeed in suit were for the most part executed before the birth of Janki Prasad, the eldest son of Salig Ram. At that time Salig Ram was sole and absolute owner of his share in the property in suit and had unrestricted power to sell or mortgage it. These mortgages were, therefore, binding on the property and Salig Ram was fully justified under Hindu Law both on the ground of legal necessity and of benefit to the family in raising money to pay them off by selling a portion of the joint family property. The property sold was a half share of the entire property covered by the mortgages.

These are the substantial issues in the case. It was faintly urged in the course of the argument in this and the other appeals that the Court should on the authority of the ruling in Balvant Santaram v. Babaji (1), presume legal necessity for the transactions on the ground that the heads of all three branches of the family concurred in them; but where the purpose for which the sale consideration was made is known, there is no room for any presumption. The Court has merely to examine whether that purpose is one which Hindu Law recognises as valid.

(1) 8 B. 602 at p. 609; 9 Ind. Jur. 227; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 778.

The principle on which the appellants rely was first fully stated in Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (2) in these terms:—

First. That where joint anesstral property has passed out of a joint family, either noder a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted, and

Secondly. That the purchasers at an execution sale, being strangers to the suit, if they have not notice that the debts were so contracted, are not bound to make exquiry beyond what appears on the face of the proceedings."

It was thus restated by Sir John Stanley, C. J., in Chandradeo Singh v. Mala Prasad (3) in words to which the Privy Council have given the sanction of their approval:—

The first of these propositions, it will be observed, deals with eases where joint anestral property has passed out of a joint family either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt or in order to raise money to pay off an antice lent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt. It deals with cases in which ancestral property has passed out of the family and with no other cases, and the words 'antecedent debt' seem to have been used advisedly."

Both these passages were quoted in Lord Shaw's judgment in Sahu Ram Chandra v.

Bhup Singh (4). Before quoting them he loosely same up the position as follows:—

"A perusal of the numerous authorities will show that where a joint family property has been sold out and out, or where a decree in execution of the mortgage has been obtained against the property, and rights have thus sprung up with regard to the joint family estate, these rights are not to be defeated by the members of the joint family simply questioning the transaction entered into by its head."

I use the word "loosely" because this summing up read literally might apply to a sale for each where there was no antecedent liability. All the authorities are agreed that in such a case sons can question the sale. Lord Shaw was not laying down any new principle. He was merely summing up the effect of the previous authorities.

The argument of the appellants is that the words "antecedent debt" in the passages quoted above include any prior debt, and are used in a different sense from that in which the same words are used in the later portion of their judgment where their Lordships say that it must be a debt incurred independently of the credit afforded by the joint estate.

The argument has only to be thus explicitly stated for it to be seen that it is untenable. It is impossible that their Lord. ships should have used an expression, which they were engaged in interpreting and on the meaning of which the decision turned, in different senses in suscessive paragraphs. The appellant was relying on an exception in favour of a sale or mortgage made in consideration of antecedent debt and the whole of the latter part of the judgment is devoted to discussing the limits of the exception, ending up with the statement that in order to validate the transaction there must be not only antecedency in time but also true dissociation in fact. Once it is proved that a sale has taken place in consideration of antecedent debt as thus defined, the sons are precluded from attack. ing it, but they are not presluded from raising the prior question whether the sale really was in consideration of such a debt. None of the cases cited in argument conflict with this view.

The appellants in Appeal No. 43 are, however, entitled to succeed as to a large part of the consideration on the second plea. The mortgages to the payment of which the consideration of the deed was applied were as follows:—

Mortgagee.		Amoun	t. D	ate.
		Re.
Musammat Bhagwani Dei.		600	13th Decem- ber 1899.
Har Charan Das		2,000	13th	June
do.		700	(ło.
do.		1,500	6th 196	June
do.	•••	500		do.

All these morigages were usufructuary, but, all but the last two of them were exeouted before the birth of Janki Prasad. The learned Subordinate Judge finds that he was born before the date of the sale. deed of 10th July 1903, but had not considered the question whether he was born on the date of these mortgages. He has, however, ascepted the statement of the plaintiffs' witnesses that Janki Prasad was about nineteen years old at the time when their evidence was given, which was in July 1919. According to this, he was born in the latter half of the year 1900. The burden of proof of minority lay on the plaintiff, and if his witnesses are not exact as to the date of his birth, their evidence cannot be strained in his favour. It is, therefore, proved that at the time of the sale deed the property had passed into the hands of mortgagees under mortgages which were valid and binding as against the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 3,300. To recover possession of the property by paying off these mortgages was a purpose for which the father could legitimately raise money as head of the joint family, and the family benefited by the transaction to the extent of the mortgages which were paid off. The plaintiff can, therfore, in any event only recover the property by re-paying this smount, No interest is allowed as the defendants have held possession of the property recently.

Similar questions are raised in Appeal No. 183. Suit No. 243 of 1919 (Appeal No. 82 of 1921) relates to a sale-deed dated 15th May 1911 executed by the three brothers in favour of Har Charan Das for a sum of Re. 4,000. Rupees. 1,500 of the coneideration was paid in each but it has been found that Rs. 521 out of this was for legal necessity. The remainder was taken in satisfaction of two prior usufructuary mortgager, Exhibits A16 and A17. These prior mortgages are of the year 1904 long after the birth of the plaintiff, Gar Presad. They are pure usufrustuary mortgages carrying no personal liability. Exhibit A16 was in satisfaction of a still earlier usufrustrary mortgage of 18 5 but even this is subsequent to Gur Presad's birth. The only ground of appeal in this case, therefore, is the first of the two grounds stated in connection with Appeal No. 43. There is a elause in these prior mortgages making the mortgagor perconally liable for the mortgage money in case the mortgagee should be dispossessed from the mortgaged property, and it was suggested in the course of the argument that this might be held to constitute a personal liabitity within the meaning of the ruling in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4) as interpreted by this Court in Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (5) and Ram Dei v. Suroj Bakhsh (6), but, as the respondents point out, this. liability is imposed by law in the case of every usufructuary mortgage, and if this argument were accepted, the distinction drawn in the rulings of this Court between a purely usufrustuary mortgage and the mortgage which carries with it liability to a personal decree for a mortgage-debt would become entirely meaningless.

Suit No. 118 of 1919 (Appeal No. 183 of 1921) relates to the same sale deed of 13th May 1911 for Rs. 4,000 which is in issue in Appeal No. 82 and another sale of 7th May 1912 for Rs. 3,000. It is enrious that in this case the learned Subordinate Judge has some to an opposite conclusion from that which he arrived at of Rs. 521 which forms part of the consideration of the deed for Rs. 4,000. In the earlier suit he held it to be for legal necessity. In the latter suit he held that legal necessity was not proved. As the evidence was separately recorded in the two cases, it was open to him to do this, but it is perhaps surprising that he should have made no reference to having previously come to an opposite conclusion on the same facts.

Although the first deed in suit is same as in Appeal No. 87, the legal poeition is substantially different. As has been already showr, the dead was executed to the extent of Rs. 2,500 in satisfaction of two earlier mortgages of 1904 for Rs. 1,200 and Rs. 1,300 respectively; and one of these, that for Rs. 1,200, was executed in satisfaction of a mortgage of 1895. Neither of the sons of Mahabir was that time born. The age of the elder given in the plaint as 21 so that he was born about the beginning of 1898. The mortgage of 1895 was, therefore, a valid mortgage which the plaintiffs could not question and they could only recover possession of the property which had passed away from the family by paying it off.

The sale-deed for Rs. 3,000 was executed partly for each and partly in satisfaction of four earlier mortgage deeds. of these usufrueluary mortgage-Were deeds, excepted in 1903 and 1904 time when the elder son of the executant was already born. The fourth mortgage was a simple mortgage for Rs. 175 carry. ing a personal liability and this constitutes genuine anteredent debt sufficient to support the subsequent alienation. The amount set off in the sale deed on this account was Rs. 216, and this amount the defendants can rightly claim,

The result is as follows. In Appeal No. 43 the decree of the Court below is modified by directing that as a condition of recovering possession the plaintiffs must pay to the defendants Rs. 3,300. Appeal No. 82 is dismissed. Appeal No. 183 is allowed and the plaintiffs are given a decree for possession of the property subject to their rs-paying to the defendants the sum of Rs. 1,416.

As the law was understood at the time when the transactions were entered into, the defendants had reason to suppose that they were valid, and in view of this fact and of the length of time after which they have been challenged. I allow the plaintiffs no easts of the appeals to this Court. In Appeals Nos. 43 and 183 in which the defendants have been partly successful, the parties will bear their own costs throughout. As Appeal No. 82 has failed, the Sabardinate Judge's order as to costs will not be disturbed.

Where a person consents to land being mutated in favour of another, it is a clear indication of the relinquishment of his rights in it. [p. 937, col. 2]

An Appellate Court is not bound to record a finding upon every plea entered in the memorandum of appeal unless it is urged before it. An appellant may take as many pleas as he likes, but a Court is bound to give a decision on those pleas only which are urged and argued before it. [p. 937, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT—The facts giving rise to this second appeal may be summarised as below. One Jalla had three sons, Raja, Gada

BAJA U. SALABAT.

(Sada) and Dalla. Dalla had three cons, Salabat, defendant No. 1, Mohabbat, defendant No. 2 and defendant No. 3. Gada (Sada) baving died without any issue his widow, Musammat Saban entered into possession of the property left by him. She having married Dalla her rights in the land are said to have come to an end. Raja same into Court alleging that after the death of Gada (Sada) he and Musammat Saban, wife of the deceased, remained in possession of the land, but that recently he discovered that the land had been mutated in the names of his ne phews, Salabat, Mohabbat and Fazal. applied without success for the correction of the entry. On these facts the plaintiff claimed possession of the land. The suit was resisted by the defendants on the ground that the mutation of the defendant's father's name had been effected with the consent and knowledge of the plaintiff. The reason given for the consent was that Jalla had separated from his two sons, Gada (Sada) and Dalla, and had remained joint with the plaintiff, that on the death of Jalla Lis entire estate of which he was then possessed went to the plaintiff, and that Gada and Dalla raised no objection on the agreement that the plaintiff would have nothing to do with the land in their possession. It was alleged that in parsuance of this compromise the plaintiff expressly consented to the land in dispute being entered in the name of the defendants' father. The defendants further set up the pleas of adverse possession, estoppel, limitation and want of jurisdiction. Issues were framed by the Court of first instance on all these points, and the decisions on all these issues was given against the plaintiff. He was found to have been out of proprietary possession of the land for more than 12 years. His possession over some portion of the land was found to be that of a tenant atwill under the defendants. The sait was held to be barred by time and the possession of the defendants as proprietors was found to be adverse for more than 12 years. The plaintiff was held to be estopped from setting up the elaim, and it was elearly determined that the plaintiff had abandoned his rights in favour of the defendant's father and had willingly allowed the name of Dalla to be entered as the proprietor of the land in dispute. During the trial of the suit before the learned Munsif, it was also hinted that at the date of the mutation of names and the alleged abandonment the plaintiff was a minor and was not bound by the abandonment, even if established. As no clear evidence as to the plaintiff's age was giver, no effect was given to the plea and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. An appeal was preferred by the plaintiff to the lower Appellate Court and in the memorandum of appeal pleas were raised impugning the decisions of the First Court on almost all the issues. Argument, however, appears to have been advanced only questioning the validity of the abandonment on the ground of the minority of the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court found the following facts :-

(1) Gada died sometime after 1897 without any issue, and his widow, Musammat

Sabar, succeeded to his land.

(2) On her marrying Dalla, the father of the defendants, the patwari made an entry in the register of mutations on the 8th of October 1902 showing that Dalla had been in possession of Musammat Saban's land and that Raja, the plaintiff, did not claim a share in it. In the ordinary course this mutation same before a Naib Tahsildar, and he with his report sent it up to the Collector for sanction with the remark that Raja had no objection to the mutation of the land in favour of Dalla.

Assistant Colonization Officer, who sent these to the Collector with the following remarks:—
"Musammet Saban's half equare should go in equal shares to Raja and Dalla, but Raja whose statement is on the file, does not wish to take his share of this half equare and he wishes that the whole balf equare may go to Dalla. Dalla and Musammat Saban, of course, likewise desire this. This is an alienation inter vivos and would require the exection of the Financial Commissioner."

The Collector forwarded the papers to the Financial Commissioner, who, on the 28th of July 1904, granted the necessary sanction and mutation was effected in the name of Dalla accordingly. On these findings the question of the alleged minority of the plaintiff became very material, and as no evidence had been recorded on the point and final decision had not been given on it, the lower Appellate Court referred an issue on the point under Order XLI, rule 25, to the Court of free instance for decision. Evidence was produced by both the parties before the learned Muneif who, after considering the entire evidence on the point recorded the following finding :-

"The birth entry Exhibit P.A. filed by the defendant amply shows that Raja, son of Jalle, was born on the 5th November 1884 in village Khanshandwals, and I think this is a weighty piece of evidence to show that in 1904 when the mutation was sanctioned by the Naib Tahsildar the plaintiff was about 20 years old. He cannot be said to be micor at that time."

On the Sinding being returned to the lower Appellate Court objections were urged against it, one of the objections being that the Court of first instance had wrongly refused to ascertain through the Phillour Bareau whether the thumb impression on the mutation entry relied upon by the defendants was that of the plaintiff. The objections raised were overralled by the lower Appellate Court and after overruling the objections the lower Appellate Court made the following remarks in the judgment:—

"Arguments were addressed to me by parties' Counsel regarding the question of abaudonment by plaintiff and his age. The points that arise in this appeal are :-"

"(1) Whether the plaintiff abandoned his right in the land at the time the mutation was entered in respondent's favour, and

"(2) Whether he was a minor."

The decision of these questions was given against the plaintiff with the result that the appeal was dismissed and the decree of the Court of first instance was upheld. The plaintiff then came up in second appeal to this Court. On the appeal coming up for hearing before the late learned Chief Justice, he directed an enquiry by the Police Bureau at Phillour as to the genuineness of the alleged thumb impression of the plaintiff. The result of the exquiry being unfavourable to the plaintiff, the finding on the question of minority recorded by the lower Appellate Court stands unreversed and is final.

dressed to me by Mr. M. S. Bhagat on behalf of the appellant. He has tried to re argue all the questions of fast and law which have been discussed and decided by both the Courts below. He has tried to re-open the questions.

tion of the minority of the plaintiff and has criticised the evidence on the record. He has further made an attempt to show with reference to the evidence on the record that the findings of the two Courts as to the astual relinquishment by the plaintiff of his rights in the land were not established. In my opinion these are questions of fact which the appellant is not entitled to arge in second appeal. Mr. Bhagat strongly urged that his elient had not been fairly treated by the lower Appellate Court inasmuch as all the pleas raised in the memorandum of appeal had not been considered and decided seriatim by that A reference to the judgment of the lower Appellate Court clearly shows that only two points were orged before it on receipt from the lower Court of the finding on the question of minority. An Appellate Court is not bound to record a finding upon every plea entered in the memorandum of appeal unless it is urged before it. At appellant mey take as many pleas as he likes, but a Court is bound to give a decision on those pleas only which are urged and argued before it. Bhagat was, however, entitled to question the effectiveness of the abandonment in law on the fasts found, and although this was objected to by Dr. Iqbal on the ground that the plea had not been raised in the memorandum of appeal to this Court, I allowed Bhagat to raise it before me as it involved a pure question of law. It was contended by Mr. Bhagat that the mutation entry could not have the effect of extinguishing the proprietary rights of the plaint. iff as it was agreed to merely on the ground of Dalla's possession, In support of this argument he relied upon Chokhey Singh v. Jote Singh (1). This raling was also relied apon before the lower Appellate Court, and was distinguished by that Court on facts from the present case. In my opinion the lower Appellate Court took the right view. It was, however, contended that the final entry to which the thumb impression of the plaintiff was affixed did not contain any words which would amount to a relinquish. ment of the plaintiff's rights, but the muta. tion proceedings commenced from the date

That report contains the statement of the plaintiff, which unmistakably amounts to a relinquishment of his rights. The different stages of the mutation proseedings must be looked at as a whole, and final entry must be construed to have been made with reference to all the proceedings taken in connection therewith. It is impossible to hold that the statement contained in the report of the patwari, on the basis of which subsequent orders were passed, was not present before the plaintiff when he gave his consent to the mutation of the name of Dalla.

The present case, therefore, is clearly distinguishable from the ruling above referred to. In my opinion the Courts below have arrived at a right conclusion and this appeal must be dismissed with costs. I order accordingly.

Hindu Law-Joint family-Alienation-Right to suc, when accrues-After-born son, position of-Limitation, fresh start of-Sons, elder, position of-Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 6, 7, application of.

Under Hindu Law the cause of action in respect of an alienation accrues when the purchaser takes possession and a new cause of action does not accrue upon the subsequent birth of a son in the family, and a fresh period of limitation does not start from the date of his birth. In his case the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned is the date of the transfer, and as he was not born on that date and was thus under no disability on that date, he could not obtain the benefits of section 6 of the Limitation Act. And, when he could not obtain such benefit himself, he could give no benefit under section 7 to his elder brothers. [p. 940, col. !.]

JUDGMENT.

D.L.L, A. J. O.—The question of limitation raised in this appeal is concluded by an unreported Bench decision of this Court in First Civil Appeal No. 10 of 1920 decided on 5th of April 1921, Chokkey Singh v. Harden Singh (1) J. As, however, the correctness of that decision was questioned at the Bar and the whole point was argued on behalf of the appellante, it will be necessary for me to give reasons for my agreement with the result of that decision.

The property in suit was sold by the father of the plaintiffs who is a defendant to the suit on the 3rd of June 1893. The four plaintiffs were born on the following dates:—

Ranodip Singh on the 23rd of August

Kali Bakhsh Singh on the 4th of August

Sitla Bakhsh Singh on the 1st of Ostober 1897, and Parmeshur Bakhsh Singh on the 30th of November 1900.

The plaintiffs sued to have the sale by the manager of the joint Hindu family set aside on the ground that the alienation was without legal necessity. The learned Sabordinate Julga of Bahraish dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation under Article 126 of the Limitation Act. From that decree the plaintiffs have appealed.

(1) 61 Ind. Cas. 757; 21 O C. 330; 8 O. L. J. 687; U. P. L. R. (J. C.) 10. RANODIP SINGH C. BAMBSHAR PRASAD.

It was argued that Ranodip Singh and Kali Bakksh Singh, who were in existence at the time of the transfer, were entitled to sue under the provisions of sections 6 and 7 of the Limitation Act up to the 4th of August 1912. Before that data however Sitla Bakbsh Singh and Parmeshur Bakhsh Singh were born, so the period of limitation will extend under section 8 of the Limitation Act up to the time when Parmeshur Bakhsh Singh attained the age of 21, that is, up to 30th of November 1921. If this reasoning be accepted, the suit of the plaintiffs would by within time.

Confining myself first to the Limitation Act it is clear that the reasoning is uncound. Section 6 enacts "Where a person entitled to institute a suit or make an application for the execution of a deeree is, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reskoned, a minor...... he may institute the suit or make the application within the same period after the disability has ceased, as would other. wise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the First Schedule." Now Sitla Bakhah Singh and Parmeshar Bakhsh Singh were not in existence at the time of the alienation, that is, at the time from which the period of limitation in this suit is to be reskoned, so the provisions of section 6 cannot apply to them. Sitla Bakhsh Singh and Parmeshur Bakhsh Singh had to sue within twelve years of the date of alienation in 1893 unless they could sue jointly with any other member of the joint family. The whole difficulty in a discussion of this matter arises because the after born sons have a vested interest coextensive with that of the previously born sons of the family. Sitla Bakbsh Singh and Parmesbur Bakbeh Singh could not only sue within twelve years of the date of alienation but they sould also take advantage of any extention of time obtained by their brothers under section 6 of the Limitation Act. In the Privy Council raling of Ramkishore Kedarnalh v. Jainarayan Ramrachpal (2) when limitation was found to be saved with respect to previously born sons, the advantage of such saving was given also to after-born sons. Their Lordships observed at page 980. 't was conceded before this Board, and, as their Lordships think, rightly conced. ed, that if the first plaintiff susseeds in the suit, his younger brothers born before a partition of the estate will be entitled to share in the relief." This ruling however does not decide the question in favour of an after-born son that he shall have the advantage of the provisions of section 6 from the date of his birth. The case of Ganga Dayal v. Mani Bam (3) which followed Peraisami v. Krishna Ayyar (4), and Johnson v. Madras Railway Company (5) also make no referense to the applicability of section 6 to an after-born son. In all those rulings the question for desision was whether, where all the sons were in existence at the time of the alienation, the minority of the youngest saved limitation in the ease of the eldest son or not. It was held that by the application of the provisions of section 7 of the Limitation Act in such a case the period of limitation for all the sons extended to the time up to three years after the youngest son had attained majority. To make an instance from the present case, Ranodip Singh attained majority in 1904 and could have brought a suit to set aside the alienation up to 1907 but because of the existence of Kali Bakhsh Singh at the time of the alienation and the right which Kali Bakhah Singh had to bring the suit up to the year 1912, Ranodip Singh also, under the provisions of section ? of the Limitation Act, would be entitled to bring a suit in 1912. These principles of law would not come into operation as regards Sitla Bakhsh Singh and Parmeshur Bakhsh Singh bacause they were not in existence on the date of alienation and the provisions of section 6 do not apply to them. The appellants' learned Pleader pointed out that in the case of Lachman Das v. Sundar Das (6), which was quoted with approval in the Bench ruling of this Court, the Judges did not ecnsider the question under section 7 of the Limi tation Act. It is true that in that ease the rights of the eldest con, Lachman Das, were not considered in connection with the rights of his brothers and his suit would not be time barred if the suit of his brothers had been within time. But this point which was conceded, possibly wrongly, by the appellants' Conneel in the appeal, does not in any way affect the finding as regards the inapplicability of the provisions of section 6 of the Limitation Act to after born sons.

A son born in a joint Hindu family acquires by birth interest in ancestral property but does not acquire any interest in any right to sus. The eause of action accrues after an alienation when the purchaser takes posses sion and a new sauce of action does not accrue upon the subsequent birth of a son in the family. This was held as early as 1867 in Ra a Ram Tewary v. Luchmun Pershad (7). The same view was held in Sildhessur Dutt v. Sham Chand Nundun (8) and the same principle of law was laid down by the Privy Council in Ujagar Singh v. Pitam Singh (9). Under the circumstances the after born son does not acquire a fresh cause of action and a fresh period of limitation does not start from the date of his birth. In the case of an after born son the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned is the date of the transfer, and as he was not born on that date and was under no disability on that date, he cannot obtain the benefits of the provisions of section 6 of the Limitation Act. When he cannot save limitation for himself, he can give no benefit under section 7 to his elder brothers.

To sum up my view of the law on the subject is that Ranodip Singh and Kali Bakhsh Singh could have brought the present suit up to 1-12 and in that suit both Sitla Bakheb Singh and Parmeshwar Singh sould have joined effectively. After 1912 no suit by any of the brothers would lie because Sitla Bakhsh Singh and Parmeshar Bakhsh Singh were not entitled to the benefits of the provisions of section 6 of the Limitation Act and for that reason the two elder brothers could not derive any benefit under section 7. I, therefore, hold that the suit in the lower Court was time barred and I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

WAZIR HASAN, A. J. C .- Personally I hold a somewhat different view on the question which my learned colleague has elaborate. ly, if I may respectfully say so, discussed in his judgment, but in this particular ease the ecuslusion to which I have arrived coincides with the final proposal of my learned colleague that the appeal should be dismissed. I, therefore, concur in the order which my learned colleague would pass in this appeal.

A decree-holder applied for execution in 1919. The application was rejected as time-barred. He applied again in 1920 relying on an acknowledgment made in his favour in '918. The Court rejected the application saying that as his previous application was held to be barred by time, the point was res judicata On appeal:—

Held, (1) that the only ground on which the application could be barred as resjudicata would be that the applicant ought to have raised the issue of acknowledgment in his previous application. This was an extent to which the doctrine of res judicata

(2 that in the earlier application there was no adjudication that the execution of the decree was barred but only that the application was not shown to be within time;

A second application for execution No. 166 of 1919 was made on 25th June 1919 but it was rejected as time barred. The decree holder again applied for execution on the 19:h June 1920 relying on an acknowledgment made on the 19th June 1917 and signed by the opponent in a compromise application in a partition suit between himself and his brother. The learned Subordinate Judge said:-"Darkhast was held to be timebarred in a previous appliestion. The priot is thus see judicata. The present application must, therefore, be rejected." He decided, therefore, that once a Darkhast had been rejected as time barred no further Darkhast That is not in agreecould be filed. ment with the desision in Mahadeo V. Trimbakbhat (1), All that was decided in the previous Darkbast of 1919 was that the Darkhast itself was not in time. That would not prevent the executing plaintiff from filing another Darkhast and seeking to bring it within limitation on grounds which were not before the Ccurt when the previous Darkhast was flad. The only ground on which this Darkhest could be rejected would be that the petitioner ought to have relied upon the acknowledgment of June 1917 when he filed the previous Darkhast, and not having done so he is for ever barred from relying upon it. It does not seem to me that the doetrine of res judicata can be extended to that length. I agree with what was said by my brother Shah in the case of Mahadeo v. Trimbokbhat (1), which was eited, that in the earlier Darkhast there was no adjudication that the execution of the decree was barred but only that the application was not shown to be in time. I think, therefore, that the Rule must be made absolute and that the Darkhast must be returned to the lower Court to be dealt with on the merits.

Where endowed property belonging to an idol is taken possession of adversely, limitation to sue for possession of such property begins to run from the date of possession having been taken and each succeeding manager of the endowed property does not get a fresh start of limitation upon the ground of his not deriving title from any previous manager, as the succeeding shebaits form a continuing representation of the idol's property. [p. 942, col.:.]

Where a person wrongfully in possession admits to the rightful owner that he disclaims all interest in the property in his possession, but does not voluntarily abandon or relinquish possession, the admission does not affect the relation between them so as to convert what was previously adverse possession into possession of another character. JUDGMENT.-The only question for determination in this appeal is whether or not the plaintiffs' suit was barred by limitation. Both the Courts below have held that it is.

The property in suit consists of three kothris (rooms) attached to a mosque at Ajudhia.

It has been beld in a case decided in this Court in the year 19.3 that this property is wagf property. The suit in which that decision was some to was brought by one Shaikh Abdul Ghafur against Shiam Sundar Das who is now represented by the first defendant, Janki Das.

While it was held in this Court that the property was waqf property it was also held that Shaikh Abdul Ghafur was not entitled to have possession of it inasmuch as he was not the mutwalli of the trust property. His suit for possession, therefore, failed.

ABDUL BASBID U. JANI DAS.

After the suit was dismissed the plaintiffs went to the Court of the District Judge and in the month of February 1918 they obtained an order appointing them mutwallis of the mosque and of the property in suit. The present suit was filed on the 24th of October 1918 and the defendants set up a plea of limitation.

It was admitted in the plaint, and it was found in the earlier suit, that Shiam Sundar Das had been in possession of this property since the year 1903. It also seems evident that the plaintiffs in the present suit have never been in possession of the property in dispute.

I am not disposed to agree with the view taken by the Courts below that Article 142 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act was the proper Article to apply in this case for the purpose of determining the rule of limitation. It seems to me that the suit was really a suit on title and that it was for the defendants to prove adverse possession. However, even in this view it appears to me that the plea of adverse possession for more than 12 years must be sustained.

It is argued for the plaintiffs that the possession of these defendants did not and could not become adverse to them until the month of February 1918 when they (the plaintiffs) were appointed mutualis of the property. The argument is that it was only from the date of their appointment as such that the plaintiffs became entitled to possession of this waqf property.

A similar plea was raised in the ease which is reported as Nilmony Singh v. Jagabandhu Roy (1). In that case certain debutter property had been slienated in the years 1857 and 1875 by the sebait. In the year 1888 the sebait, who had made these alienations, was removed from office and the plaintiff was appointed in her place, The plaintiff brought a suit in 18:2 for recovery of possession of the endowed properties which had been alienated in the years 1857 and 1875. When the plea of limitation was raised, the argument for the plaintiff was, as it is here, that limitation began to run against him from the year 1898, the date on which he was appointed sebait, but the High Court repelled this contention. They held that the possession of the defendants who professed to derive title not from the idol, but ignoring its rights, must be taken to have become adverse to the idol from the dates of the two alienations which were both more than 12 years before the date of the suit. It was held that each succeeding manager of the endowed property could not get a fresh start so far as the question of limita. tion is concerned upon the ground of his deriving title from any previous manager. The opinion of the Court was that the succeeding sebasts formed a continuing representation of the idol's property. And the Court also drew attention to the anomalous results which would follow if any other view of the law were taken.

Similarly, in the case now before me, I think it is not open for the plaintiffs to argue that limitation began to run against them only from the year 1918. In my opinion it began to run in the year 1803 when the defendants' predesessors took possession of the property.

Another argument which was put forward in the Courts below, and has also been advanced here, relates to an admission which is said to have been made in the previous litigation relating to this property. It is stated in the judgment of this Court, which was passed in the month of January 1913, that chiam Sundar Dar, who is now represented by the first defendant, disslaimed all interest in this property. The contention, therefore, is that in view of this admission the possession of Shiam Sundar Das and of the present defendant cannot be treated as adverse. Bat even if this admission was made it is apparent that the person who was wrongfully in possession did not voluntarily abandon or relinquish possession. According to the statements in the plaint the defendants are still in possession of the property and I cannot, therefore, accept the argument that any admission of the nature above described made in the earlier litigation affected the relation between the parties so as to convert what was previously adverse possession into possession of another character. I hold that the decision of the Courts below is correct. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Contract, suit on-Wagering contract, plea of, in defence-Onus of proof-Witness-Abstention of party to enter witness-box-Presumption.

Where in a suit to recover damages on the basis of a contract, the defendant pleads that the contract was in the nature of a wager, the onus of proving that the contract was wagering lies upon him, his mere statement that the contract was of a wagering nature is not proof of the fact asserted.

Where a defendant abstains from going into the witness-box on his own behalf to be cross-examined by the plaintiff, the Court is entitled to infer every thing against him.

First appeal from the desision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Sholapur, in Suit No. 175 of 1919.

Mr. Copasee (with him Mr. G. N. Thakor), for the Appellant.

Mr. Bahadurji (with him Mr. G. I. Murdeshvar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT .- The plaintiff sued for damages in respect of certain contracts for the purchase and sale of yarn. The contracts were admitted. The only defence that the defendant could take was that the contracts were wagering. The hearing of the case followed rather a peculiar course. On the 3rd February 1920 the suit was placed for hearing and although the parties were present, the plaintiff was not examined by his Pleader but was examined for the Court. Also the defendant was examined for the Court on the 15th. Then, although each party had issued summonses to witnesses, none of the witnesses turned up and eventually on the 1st March 1920 the defendant's Pleader put in a most remarkable purshis:

There is now no necessity for the defendant to state anything more to the Court than what he has (already) stated to this Court on solemn affirmation. The defendant is not responsible to keep himself in attendance for cross examination and the suit has not come to that stage, that is to say, that stage of procedure. No steps whatever have been taken heretofore on behalf of the plaintiff for examination of the defendant. The defendant now objects to the grant of time to the plaintiff for that purpose. The burden of proof as regards the first issue is thrown on the defendant. No additional evidence is to be given just now on behalf of the defendant."

that the contracts were wagering lay on the defendant. All that was said in his deposition before the Court was that the contracts were of a wagering nature. That of course was not proof of the fact asserted. He would have to show that at the time the contract was entered into, the common intention was not to give and take delivery but to pay differences. The purshis continues:—

"The defendant reserves the evidence which he is entitled to give by law by way of rebuttal against the evidence that may be given on behalf of the plaintiff."

The defendant also seems to have considered that he was not bound to go into the witners box to be cross examined by the plaintiff, but that the only way for the plaintiff to get his evidence was by issuing a summons to the defendant himself. If the defendant did not shose to go into the witnessbox on his own behalf, that was a matter for himself to deside, but in an ordinary case, the Court is entitled to consider that as a point against the defendant. Certainly if a defendant says "I am not going into the witness box unless I am summoned by the plaintiff," he puts himself in the wrong. For the plaintiff is not bound to issue a summons to the defendant, and unless the defendant gives evidence on his own behalf so as to give the plaintiff an opportunity of ercas examining him, then the Court is entitled to infer everything against the defendant. Thus the defendant has absolutely failed to prove what he was bound to prove, in order to succeed in his defence that the suit transactions were of the nature of wagering contracts. The result must be that the appeal must be allowed and the plaintiff will have a decree for Re. 18,201 4-0 and costs throughout.

JUDGMENT .- The question raised in appeal is whether any period of time is fixed for the lodging of an application by a mortgagor for desposit of mortgage money after the passing of a decree in a redemption suit under section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act. The point is covered by authority in this Court of a decision of a single Judge in Bisheshar Singh v. Bikrama, it Singh (1). The learned Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Lindsay, held right to redeem could be that the exercised at any time before an order been passed and, absolute for sale had valid therefore, the deposit was even though made long after the expiry of three years from the date of the decree. In the present case it is admitted that the defendant mortgagee has not obtained an order absolute under section 93 debarring the mortgagor of all right to redeem the mortgaged property. The decree under section 92 was to the effect that upon the plaintiff paying to the defendant or into Court on the aforesaid 24th February 1907 a certain sum the defendant shall deliver up to the plaintiff all documents in his possession and shall retransfer the property to the plaintiff free from the mortgage and shall put the plaintiff ipto possession of the mortgaged property; but that if such payment be not made as aforesaid on the date fixed, the plaintiff shall be debarred of all rights of redemp-There is no doubt that the plaintiff sould make a deposit subsequent to the date given in the decree but the question of diffiealty to deside is whether the limitation provided by Article 181 or 1:2 of the Limitation Ast applies to an application by the mortgagor to deposit the money. In the present case the mortgagor has applied for permission to deposit money and requested the Court to inform the mortgages to with. draw the money and put the mortgagor into possession. Under the enresponding provisions of the Civil Prosedure Code repealing sections 92 and 93 of the Transfer of Property Act, it is held by the Allahabad High Court that an application to deposit money under Order XXXIV, rule 5, is governed by the limitation prescribed by Article 181 of the Limitation Act: Gujadhar Singh v. Kishen Jiwin Lal (2). The wording of the Code of Civil Procedure, however, has been entirely changed and the proceedings between the preliminary decree and the final decree are proceedings in a suit. On deposit of mortgage-money the Court is bound to pass a decree containing certain orders. Under section 92 after a decree is passed in favour of the mortgagor, no further decree or order absolute by the Court is enjoined under section 93 of the Transfer of Property Act on deposit being made by the mortgagor. Under these circumstances the decision of a single Judge of this Court referred to above appears to me to be sound. There is another Bench ruling of this Court in Vidyasagar v. Ratipal (3), where in a decree for foreelosure obtained by a mortgages under sestion 86, Transfer of Property Act, it was held that the right of a mortgagor to pay in the amount due under a deeree niei is a continuing right and can be exercised at any time until an order absolute is passed. It was definitely held there that no period of limitation applied to an application by the mortgagor to deposit money. The appellant's learned Counsel pointed out that the deeree-holder in a decree under section 86 would be the mortgages and so the ruling in Vidyangar v. Ratipal (3), would not apply here. If, however, sections 86 and 92 are read together, it would be found that there is no distinction in the daty enjoined by the two sestions on the mortgagor, so it makes no difference whether he happened to be a plaintiff or a defendant. The learned Counsel invited the Court's attention to the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Chamier, in Jageshar Singh v. Bhagioin Bakhih Singh There the learned Julge entered (4). into an inquiry whether an application by the mortgagor desree holder for delivery of possession was made within three years as required by Article 182 of the Limitation Act. That application, hovever, was for delivery of possession and not for deposit of money. An application for possession may have to be made within three years of the deposit of mortgage money but that is not a question for decision here. This Court eveds beloup seers sends ad lls ni bled sed, t'a' under the Transfer of Property Act a mortgagor has a right to redeem the mortgage at any time before the passing of an order absolute either for sale or foreslosure by the mortgages. I do not .think that this question arising under the Transfer of Property Act can well be reopened in this Court.

The appeals fail and I dismiss them with

- Bonthal Parginas Settlement Rejulation (III of 1872).

Regulation (III of 19.8), amending s. 5—Amendment, effect of Sonthal Parganas—Settlement Jurisdiction—Interest—Limitation Act (IX of 908), ss. 2, 14—Defendant, meaning of—Suit against Mitakshara family—New horn son impleaded—Defendant, new, whether introduced—Hindu Law—Antecedent debt, doctrine of -Applicability as against collaterals.

The effect of the amendment of section 5 of Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation III of 1872 by Sonthal Parganas Settlement (Amendment) Regulation III of 1908, is to exclude the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to try cases relating to land in the Sonthal Parganas only during such period as that land should be under settlement, the period being reckoned from the time when the land is notified as being under settlement to the time when the settlement is notified as completed. [p 948, col. 1.]

The operation of section 6 of Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation III of 1872, unlike section 5, is not limited to the time during which a settlement is going ou, nor is the section confined to the Courts locally situated in the Sonthal Parganas All Courts wherever situated who have jurisdiction to decide cases within the Sonthal Parganas, when exercising that jurisdiction, must observe the two rules relating to usury contained in that section and refuse to decree an amount of total interest in excess of the original debt or loan, that is to say, in no case can interest be decreed in excess of the amount actually advanced, after crediting interest, if any, already paid. [p 949, col.?.]

Every person who acquires an interest by devolution or otherwise in the subject-matter of litigation previously vested in another which renders him liable to be impleaded as a defendant derives his liability to be sued from that person within the meaning of section 2 of the Limitation

In the case of a new born son in a Mitakshara family, the person or persons through whom, for the purposes of section 2 of the Limitation Act, he derives the liability to be impleaded as a defendant, are the members of the family in whom the property which the son acquires by birth was previously vested [p. 952, cols. 1 & 2]

A suit to enforce a mortgage against certain members of a joint Hindu family was dismissed for want of jurisdiction. The plaintiff sued again in the proper Court also joining as defendants persons who had in the meantime been born in the family and sought to exclude the period during which he had been prosecuting the previous suit from the operation of limitation under section 14 of the Limitation Act. The defendants objected that the section was not applicable as the defendants in the two suits were not the same:—

ant was introduced [p 952, cole, 1 & 2]

The doctrine of antecedent debt applies where the debt is one incurred in substance and in reality antecedently, whether or not the debt so incurred was secured by a charge on the family property.

Although the doctrine of antecedent debt applies only as against the sons and grandsons of the debtor and does not apply so as to permit of a valid charge on the property where the interests of collaterals are involved, nevertheless where all the adult members of a family are themselves the debtors and the only other persons interested are their minor sons and grandsons, the doctrine is clearly applicable. JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J .- The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur on the 5:h February 1915 by the respondents elsi ring Rs. 11,81,811, principal and interest, due under a mortgage bond, dated the 21st December 1896, executed by some of the appellants to secure a sum of Rs. 3,50,000 of which Rs. 1,36,142 were advanced in cash, the balance being the amount due under a previous band. The bond in suit provided that the principal sum was to carry 71 per eent. compound interest with yearly rests. The principal was re-payable in the month of Falgon 1310 F. The last day of Falgon 1310 F. corresponds to the 14th March 1903 A. D. The first party defendants are the surviving executants of the bond and other members of their family who form a joint Hindu family governed by the Mithila Law. The second party defendant, Dwarka Prasad Singh, is no longer a member of the family having been adopted into another family. The third party defendants are subsequent transferees of some of the mortgaged property. The remainder are those having varying interests in the property and who have been substituted for others. The plaintiffs are successors-in interest of the mortgagee, Rai Babadur Surjya Narain Singh, deseased.

Various issues were raised at the trial. The Subordinate Judge, before whon the case came, found all the issues in favour of the plaintiffs except as to certain items of the loan which he found were not justified by legal necessity. He passed a mortgage. decree in favour of the plaintiffs for Re. 15,2:,997 including costs and interest up to the expiry of the days of grace, and as against the executants of the bond a further personal decree for the sum of Rs. 44,164, including interest and proportionate costs in respect of that part of the advance which he considered was not justified by family necessity. He further ordered that the latter sum should carry interest at 6 per cent, per annum from the date of the decree until realisation.

From that decree the defendants first party have appealed to this Court. Six points have been urged before us on behalf of the appellants:

(1) That the Bhagalpur Court had no junisdiction to try the suit.

(2) That the mortgaged property, being situated within the Sonthal Parganas, the amount of interest that can be decreed is limited by the provisions of section 6 of Regulation III of 1872 relating to the Sonthal Parganas.

(3) That the suit is barred by limita-

(4) That the claim for a personal decree is barred by the provisions of Order 11, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code.

(5) That there being no legal necessity or antecedent debt justifying the greater part of the loan the mortgage is, to that extent, not binding on the joint family property.

(6) That interest at 6 per cent, awarded by the decree is contrary to the provisions of section 6 of Regulation III of 1872.

The determination of the first point deperds upon whether section 5 of the Regulation of 1872, as amended by subsequent legislation, bars the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in the circumstances existing when the suit was instituted Section 5, as amended by Regulation III of 1908, is as follows:—

"5. (1) From the date on which under section?, the Lieutenant Governor declares, by a Notification in the Calcutta Gatetle, that a settlement shall be made of the whole or any part of the Sonthal Parganas, until the date on which such settlement is declared, by a like notification, to have been completed, no suit shall lie in any Civil Court established under the Bangal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, in regard to (a) any land or any interest in or arising out of land, or (b) the rent or profits of any land, or (c) any village headship or other office connected with any land, in the area covered by such first mentioned not feation nor shall any Civil Court proceed with the hearing of any such suit which may be pending before it."

The second clause of the section states that the Courts in which the suits referred to shall be tried are those appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor under the provisions of the Sonthal Parganas Act, 1855, or under sestion 10 of this Regulation. The 9th section referred to in section 5 enables the Lieutenant Governor from time to time by Notification in the Oalcutta Gacette to declare that a settlement shall be made of the whole or any part of the Southal Parganas.

Whether at the date of this sait settlement operations in respect to the mortgaged property were still going on in the Southal Parganas, or whather the settlement operations, which began in 1873, had been sompleted and notified in the Calcutta Gazette is a question of fact.

Oa the 20th June 1904 the same plaintiffs or their predecessors in interest instituted a suif on the same bond against the defendants' family and obtained a desree which was affirmed on appeal by the High Court of Oslantia. The defendants sarried the case on appeal to His Majesty in Council and on the 19th May 1914 that appeal was allowed and the suit was dismissed on the ground that sestion 5 of Regulation III of 1872 was a bar to the jurisdiction of the Basgalpur Court, at the date when the suit was instituted. The reason for that desision was, that the greater portion of the land included in the bond was situated within the Southal Pargauss, and although some portions of it had been settled and notification to that effect had been made as provided in the section, other portions were still under settlement, their completion not having been notified when the suit was instituted. Sae Mahi Prasid Singh v. Bamani Mohan Singh (1).

The respondents contend, however, that on the 5th February 191, when the plaint in the present suit was filed, the Settlement had been completed and daly notified and section 5 of the Ragulation had, therefore, seased to operate. The appellants, on the other hand, say that, although the last settlement operations in the Sonthal Parganas were completed in the year 1910, there was never any Notifiestion in the Calcutta Gazette to show that all the lands mortgaged and placed under settlement had been so settled.

There have been altogether four Settlement operations in the Southal Parganas since the Regulation of 1872 was passed. The first was that conducted by Mr. Wood which contioned from 1873 to 1879; the essand was Mr. Craven's Sattlement which began in 1839 and ended in 1894. Between 1893 and 1:05 Mc. H. McPherson continued the work of Ra-Sattlament began by Mr. Craven. Certain villages still remained unsettled when Mr. MsPherson made his final report and these were dealt with in Mr. Allauson's Sattlemant between 1903 and 1910. Since that date no further Settlement operations have taken place in the Southal Pargagas. Toe appellant's case is that the whole of the Southal Pargadas was placed under sattle. ment in 1873, Mr. Wood being deputed as Settlement Officer for the purpose, and that no notification was ever published in the Oricutta Greette relating to the completion of that settlement. For the first part of this contention they rely upon a statement in Mr. M.Paerson's Settlement Report. For the sesond part they rely upon the fact that no notification of the completion of Wood's Sattlement was prodused. Sines Mr. Wood's time, howavar, there has been a Ra-Sattlemens by other Settlement Officers and in each ease the notifications required by sestion 5 have been issued and are in evidence before us. The passage relied on in Mr. McPherson's report to the effect that the whole of the Southal Parganas was placed under Sottle. ment in 1873 is to be found at the beginning of his report and may be quoted here. It states: "The whole of the district, which has an area of 5470 equare miles, was Sateled for the first time unter the provisions of Regulation all of 1872 between the years 18/3 and 1879" Tae report, however, adds that "Dacing the years 1889 to 1894, 1579 equare miles of this area was settled for a adol and to coisivague edt aeban emit Lacees Ocaven, Dapaty Collector. In 1893 I was deputed to continue the work of Re-Settle.

ment." The report then explains how he had practically completed the record Settlement when Mr. Allanson took over the work in 1905, The notifications relating to the completion of the Settlements by Mr. Craven, Mr. MePherson and Mr. Allancon bave all been produced and proved in evidence. relating to Mr. Wood's Settlement has not. It is important to bear in mind that section 5 of the Regulation, as it stood in 1872, provided that "till such time as a settlement of the whole or any part of the Sonthal Parganas shall be made under the rules hereinafter provided and the settlement shall be deelared by a Notification in the Calcutta Gazette to have been completed and concluded no snit shall lie in any (Civil) Court, etc." That section excluded the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts from the date of the Regulation until the notification of completion, but in 1908 the section was repealed and new section in the form set out above was enacted. The effect of the amendment was to exclude for the future the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to try cases relating to any land in the Sontbal Parganas only during such period as that land should be under Settlement, the period being reckoned from the time when the land is notified as under Settlement to the time when the Settlement is notified as completed. The appellants who rely on the absence of a notification declaring that Wood's Settlement was completed have given no evidence to show that that Settlement was made under any notification in the Calculta Gazette or to show that the notifes. tion, if any, authorising that Settlement included the lands in suit. The passage relied on in Mr. McPheson's report shows that the whole district was settled between 1873 and 1879, and, on the evidence produced, there is nothing to show that the lands in suit were the subject of a notification either at the beginning or at the end of the first Settlement. It is not disputed that Wood's Settlement came to an end more than 35 years before the suit was instituted and the appellants are raising a purely technical objection that there is no notification to that effect. I think they are met, however, upon their own ground by the reply that they have failed to show that the lands in suit were ever brought under settlement by Notification in the Calcutta Gatetle. effect, we are asked, in the first place, to assume without evidence that there was a notification placing the lands in enit under Settlement in 1873; and, in the second place, that, although that settlement was concluded many years ago and a Re-Settlement has since taken place, there was no notification of the completion of the Settlement of these lands by Mr. Wood. It appears to me that the appellants fail at the outset to establish their plea in so far as it depends upon the first Settlement.

It is contended, however, that even under the subsequent settlements the whole of the lands in suit were never notified as out of settlement. Reliance was placed upon a passage in section 103, at page 66 of Mr. Allenson's report, to the effect that 45 villages of Taluk Barcope which had not been settled by Mr. Craven were included in Mr. McPherson's second programme, and that the notification of the completion of the settlement under Mr. MePherson's first and second programmes showed only three villages and 40 villages respectively as having been settled. Mr. Allanson adds, however, in his report: But the bulk of the estate, viz. 66.86 square miles, has been resettled in the present programme." The notification authorising Mr. Allanson's Settlement includes 201 villages in Barcope Tarzi No. 481 and the notification of completion of that settlement has been produced and proved, Assuming that a few villages in Barcope were not settled by Mr. McPherson, there is no evidence to show that these villages were not included in the Settlement made by Mr. Allanson who took over charge from Mr. M. Phereon in 1905. There is nothing to show which villages they were and there is certainly nothing to show that they were comprised in Tauzi No. 481 of Barcope within which Tarzi alone the mortgaged property in Barcope is situated. This Tauzi number comprises only a portion of what is known as Taluk Barcope or Tappa Barcope. The appellants have, therefore, failed to show that any of the mortgaged property was notified for Settlement and not notified as settled. The plea as to jurisdiction accord. ingly fails.

The second point raised is, whether the restrictions as to interest contained in scotion 6 of the Regulation of 1872 are binding upon the ordinary Civil Courts locally situated outside the Sonthal Parganes but exercising jurisdiction over property within that area and, if so, whether the sestion applies when no Sattlement operations are going on. The second branch of this question can hardly arise independently of the first as it is only during Settlement opera. tions that the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts is barred. Section 6 is as follows: -

6. All Courts having jurisdiction in the Southal Parganas shall observe the following rules relating to usury, namely :--

(a) interest on any debt or liability for a period exceeding one year shall not be desreed at a higher rate than two per sent, per mensem notwithstanding any agreement entrary, and no compound interest arising from any intermediate adjustment of account shall be decreed,

(b) the total interest desceed on any loan or debt shall never exceed one-fourth of the prinsipal sum, if the period be not more than one year, and shall not in any other ease exceed the principal of the original debt or loan.

(Explanation, -The exprassion intermediate adjustment of assount' in clause (a) of this section means any adjustment of account which is not final, and includes the renewal of an existing elaim by bond, deeree or otherwise when without the passing of fresh consideration, the original claim is increased by such renewal.

Illustration-A bond is given for Ra. 75, of which Rs. 25 are interest. Unless the obligee ean prove to the satisfaction of the Court that he gave such consideration for the bond as rendered the transaction fair and equitable, of the Rs. 75, Rs. 50 only will bear interest and the limit of the claim on the bond will be Ba. 100)."

The explanation and the illustration appended to the section were added in 1833 (V of 1893).

There appears to me to be no reason for limiting the operation of section 6 to such time as settlement operations may be in progress. Had this been the intention one would have expected that words limiting its operation to a particular period as in section 5, would have been inserted, nor san I see any reason why sestion 6, any more than section 7, should be limited in the manner augkasted. The later sestion which example estinin agreements as to rents and rights in lind from stano daty is elearly intended to be general and permanent in its appliestion. The reason for the enastment of the section is no doubt to be found in the preamble of Ast XXXVII of 1855 which, by section 2 of the Regulation, must be read with it, and which racites that the general Regulations and Asts are not adapted to the eledanos belies eleced to seen begiliviend who inhabit the district. It would be a surious result of this legislation if the protection from their own ignorance and improvidence afforded to the Southals by the section should depend upon the fortuitous eireumstanse of a Sattlement being in opera. tion. I am unable to assept this view. The considerations just mentioned apply to some extent also in determining whether the Courts mentioned in the section are only Courts locally situated in the Southal Parganas or all Courts having jurisdiction within, even when situated ontside, that area. I think the plain meaning of the section is that all Courts wherever they may be locally leddac Seda ait a sed in sed in the Southel Parganas must, when expreising jurisdiction arising within 10 68820 the Parganas, follow the rules relating usury set out in the section. This was the view expressed by Lord Moulton in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Maha Prasad Singh v. Ramani Mohan Singh (1). It is contended that the view there expressed was obiter as the case was desided upon the interpretation of clause 5 of the Regulation. The case, however, went before their Lordships on appeal upon this very question, and although their decision was ultimately based upon the question of juris. diction, they thought fit to express an opinion upon the interpretation of clause 6. The whole of the Acts and Regulations relating to by the Sonthal Parganas Justice Regulation the Sonthal Parganas were there considered and it was found that the ordinary Courte had no jurisdiction to try suits relating to land in the Sonthal Parganas so long as the land was under settlement "and further that whatever be the Court that has jurisdiction to deside eases within the Sonthal Parganas and is exercising that jurisdiction it must observe the two rules relating to usury above referred to" and in a later passage in the judgment their Lordships are also of opinion that apart from the question of jurisdiction, any Court dealing with the subject-matter of the suit would be bound to give full force and effect to the provisions of section 6 of the Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulations, 1872, relating to neary, and, therefore, to have refused to decree any compound interest arising from any intermediate adjustment of interest or an amount of total interest exercing the principal of the original debt or loan." This can only mean as I interpret it that even if the Bhagalpur Court which had tried the suit then under appeal had had jurisdiction it would have been bound by the provisions of section 6. Whether this part of the decision of their Lordships is binding upon this Court or whether it is to be 'rea'ed merely as obiter dictum need not be determined as I should have taken the same view even without the assistance of that decision.

It remains to consider the interpretation of the rules contained in section 6 and how they affect the facts of the present case. The bond in suit was the fifth of a series, the last three of which were ranewals of the previous bonds and interest then in arrears and the last two of which included additional cash loans. The following table shows some particulars of the different bonds which may conveniently be stated here:

	Date of bond.		Principal and rate of interest.	Cash consideration.			Payments admitted.
(1)	3rd October 1893		Rs. 73,001 12 per cent.	Rs. 73,000	a. 0		Rs. 12,0:0 33,917	8. 0 8	P 0 0	principal. interest.

Some argument was addressed to us as to the meaning of compound interest arising from any intermediate adjustment of assount, and the explanation added to the section. It is admitted, however, by the appellants that simple interest calculated on the actual eash advanced beginning with the first bond amounts to more than the total sums advance ed which it is contended form the principal of the original debt or loan. The actual sums advanced amount to Rs. 2,85,903 1.9 of which Rs. 12,000 were re-paid on the 13th January 1884 leaving a balance of Rs. 2,73,903 1.9 which, according to the appellante, is the limit of the total amount of interest payable. The total amount of interest admittedly paid was Rs. 1,36,357.7-12 leaving a balance of Re. 1,37,951.10 72 as interest payable in ad ition to the principal. If the appellants should fail to establish their other sontentions, they admit this basis of calculation as establishing their liability. The respondents, on the other hand, say that the principal of the original debt or loan is Rs. 3,50,0.0, the amount of the last bond, as this was a new settlement for which consideration was given by a reduction of interest. Clause (b), however, of the section provides in terms that the total interest decreed shall not exceed the principal of the original debt or loan and makes no exception in cases of renewal or intermediate adjust. ment and the illustration seems to make it elear that in no case can more than the total HARI PRASAD SINGHA D. SOURENDRA MOHAN SINHA.

sum advanced be decreed as interest. I think the intention of the section is that the liability for interest can in no case he decreed in excess of the amount actually advanced.

The respondents further contend that the interest already pa d should not be eredited in arriving at the amount which may be deereed. The wording of clause (b) of the section, if taken in its literal sense would appear to support this view. This interpre ation is, I think, contrary to the apparent purpose of the enastment as pointed out by Sir Francis Maclean, O. J., and Pargiter, J. in Rom Ohandra Marwari v. Roni Keshobati Rumari (2), where the question was fully considered and I see no reason to differ from the view expressed by the majority of the Court in that ease. I think the intention of the Legislature was that the amount decreed should not be such as to increase the total liability for interest on the bond beyond the amount of the prinsipal debt and this intention is to some extent borne out by reference to clause (a) which restricts the rate of interest. I hold, therefore, that the interest recoverable should be limited to the amount of the principal of the original debt or loan after erediting the interest already paid.

The third question relates to limitation and arises under the following sirenmstavess. The due date of the fifth and last bond was the 14th March 1903 and interest has been paid since then or any asknowledgment made which would postpone the commencement of the limitation period which in the present ease is 12 years. The present suit was instituted on the 5th February 1915 after an unsuccessful attempt to sue in the Bhagalpur Court which was dismissed by the Privy Council as already stated for want of jurisdiction. The previous suit from the time of its institution to the date when it was finally disposed of by the Judicial Committee occupied a period of about 10 years vis., from the 20th June 1904 to the 19th May 1914 and even without deducting this period the suit was instituted within the limitation period. But the defendant No. 16 (a) Sripati 6. . . .

Singh was not originally a party to the sait. He was added as a defendant on the 30th May 1916, that is, more than 12 years after the sames of action arose. By section 22 of the Limitation Act the suit must be deemed to have been instituted against him on that date. Sripati is the minor son of Sasi Bhusan Singb, defendant No. 5, and grandson of Maha Prasad Singb, deceased, both of whom were executants of the bond, He was born in 1910 after the bond was executed and whilst the previous suit was pending. He, therefore, as a member of the family acquired an interest by birth in the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property. It is contended by the appellarts that under Order XXXIV, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code he was a necessary party to the suit and as he was not joined as a party until after the limitation period had expired the suit cannot now to entertained and should be dismissed. To this contention the respordents reply. first, that by section 14 of the Limitation Act the 10 years during which they were prosecuting the previous suit should be excluded in computing the period of limitation; secondly, that Sripati was not a necessary party as his interest was sufficiently represented by his father or by one or other of the members of his family who were originally joined, some of whom at least were not executants of the bond and have raised all the pleas that are open to Sripati, thirdly, that the respondents had no notice of Sripati's existence and could not reasonably be expected to have such notice until the 25th April 1916 when it was first disclosed in the written statement of the appellant, Lakhi Prasad, and that immediately afterwards they made enquiries which disclosed that Sripati had not been living with his father's family but with his maternal grandfather at Mahagaon sines his birth, and that he was thereupon added as a party on the 30.h May, and that Order XXXIV, rule 1 only applies provided the plaintiff had notice of the interest there referred to as under the law previously in force under section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, fourthly, that the defendant Sripati, not having been born at the date of the morrgage, at most only acquired a right in the equity of redemption remaining in his father's family, ap the effect of his non-joinder would merely to to keep his right of redemption alive.

In my opinion the first point raised by the respondents viz., sestion 14 of the Limitation Act is a complete answer to the plea of limitation. When the previous suit was instituted, Sripati was not born and could not then be made a party. He was added about a year and two months after the limitation period expired, and even if the period between the institution of the first suit in 1904 and Sripati's birth in 19:0 be alone excluded, the limitation period as against him had not expired. It is argued, bowever, that he was not a defendant in the first suit and that section 14 of the Act only applies to cases where the defendants are the same. By section 2 (4) of the Act "defendant" includes any person from or through whom a defendant derives his liability to be sued. It is in my opinion through his father and the other members of his family that Sripati derives his liability to be sued. It is by reason of the charge created on the family property by them that Sripati, as a member of the family with an interest in that properly acquired at his birth, derives his liability to be impleaded as a defendant in a suit against the family property. We have been referred to certain decisions of which Sundar Lal v. Ohhitar Mal (3) may be sited as typical to show that a son in a Mitakshara family does not elaim under his father within the meaning of section 13 (now section 11) of the Civil Procedure Code. Whatever may be the weight of those authorities, and I express no opinion about them they are not anthorities as to the interpretation of section 2 of the Limita. tion Act. That section seems to assume that every person who acquires an interest by devolution or otherwise in the subject-matter of litigation previously vested in others, which renders him liable to be impleaded as a defendant derives his liabi lity to be sued from or through some body. In the case of a new born son in a Mitakshara family the person or persons through whom he derives this liability must be the other nembers of the family in whom the property which the son acquires by birth was previously vested. If the appellants' contention be accepted, it would in many cases work a manifest injustice. They contend that each member of the joint family alive at the date of the suit is a necessary party in whose absence the suit is not maintainable and further that the time compied in the previous fruitless litigation cannot be deducted in estimating the limition period as against him even if he was born the day before the second suit was instituted.

In such a case if the second suit was instituted after 12 years from the date when the cause of action arose, the non-joinder of the newly born son of whose existence the plaintiffs had no knowledge would render the whole suit liable to dismissal unless it can be said that the new member of the family derives his liability to be sued from or through his father or those who before his birth represented the property. In my opinion section 14 of the Limitation Act applies and the suit is not barred. It is not necessary, therefore, to consider the other points taken by the respondents on this part of the case.

The fourth point taken by the appellants relates only to the respondents, right to a personal decree against the executants of the bond. It is contended by the appellants that in the previous suit no claim was made for a personal deeree and, therefore, the respondents are presluded by Order II, rule 2 from suing for the relief which they cmitted from the previous suit. As en alternative argument they contend that if a elaim for a personal deeree must be taken to have been included in the previous suit then it must be regarded as having been dismissed, not for want of jurisdiction, but on some other ground and the matter is resjudicata and eannot be re-opened. F. r. this part of the argument they rely upon section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code read in the light of the 4th and 5th Explanations appended to the section.

The relief asked for in the previous suit was in the form usually employed in such sace. It seked for (1) an account of the amount due under the bond with directions to the defendants to pay the amount found due within six months and in default a sale of the mortgaged property and extinguishment of the right of redemption, (2) in the event of the mortgaged property proving insufficient to cover the decretal amount and costs, a decree against the persons of the defendants Nos. 1 to 7 (the surviving excentants of the bond) and the properties of the first party defendants (all the members of the family), and (3) such other relief as may be deemed proper. The second prayer is, not doubt, inserted in pursuance of Order XXXIV, rule 6 of the Civil Procedure Code. The cause of action in the present case was the failure to rc-pay the principal and interest due under the bond and the relief claimable was both against the property hypothesat ed and against the executants of the bond on their covenant to rc-pay. It would follow, therefore, that if the respondents omitted to sue for a personal deares against the mortgagors on the sevenant they could not afterwards sue for that which was omitted. It is not usual or necessary to ask for a personal decree where the property is held liable for the whole of the prineipal debt and interest except in so far as the proceeds may be insufficient but it is quite open to the Court in a suit framed as this was to pass a decree against the mortgagors on their coverant to re-pay if the whole or a part of the elaim should be held not to be chargeable on the property, I think it must be held, therefore, that the respondents did not omit to sue for a personal deeree which might be granted under the third prayer sat out in the plaint. It is argued, however, that, even so, no effort was made in the previous sait to obtain a personal decree when the deeree for sale of the property failed, and if such a claim was involved it must be taken to have been dismissed by their Lordships when the matter came before the Judicial Committee. It must be conceded that the relief if elaimed must be deemed to have been dismissed and the appellants contend that it could not have been dismissed for want of jurisdiction. I think it would be fruitless to speculate as to the reasons why the relief was refused. It was merely aneillary to a claim in regard to land over which the Bhagalpur Court had no jurisdiction and the whole suit was dismissed upon that ground and no other. I do not think it is open to us to assume that their Lordskips had any other reason for refusing this relef and I would hold that it is still open to the respondents to slaim may fail against the mortgaged property. I may mention that the point does not appear to have been urged before the Subordinate Judge and we have not the advantage of having his opinion before us.

The fifth point rasises two questions, (1) whether there was an antecedent debt which would justify the alienation of the family property, and (2) whether, failing such justifiestion, the loan was for the benefit of the family or warranted by family necessities. In the former case the charge would be valid. In the latter case the consent of the minor members of the family to the transaction would be implied although not expressly given. As to Rs. 2,13,858 advanced under the bond, this sum was the balance due under the previous bond for which the fathers of all the minor defendants were liable. To this extent, therefore, there was presumably an antesedent debt for which the debtors could validly charge the family property without the express consent, of their Two points, howsoos or grandsons. ever, were raised by the appellants which require consideration. In the first place, it was argued that the principle laid down in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Biup Singh (4) had effect of limiting the dostrine of antesedency to such debts only as are not themselves secured by a charge on the immoveable property of the family. So far as this Court is concerned, we are bound by the decision of the majority of the Fall Bench in the recent case of Mathura Misra v. Rajkumar Misra (5) which decided. following the decision of the High Court at Madras in Arumugham Ohstiy v. Muthu Koundan (6), that the dostrine of antesedency applies where the debt is one insurred in. substance and reality antecedently to the mortgage, whether or not the debt so insurred was seeured by a charge on the family property. This point must, therefore, be decided against the appellants.

In the second place the appellants contend that the role as to antesedent deht cannot apply where it is the joint debt of the heads of the different branches of the joint family. They rely for this proposition upon certain passages in the Vivada Chintamani, an authority binding upon those governed by the Mithila School of Mitakehara Law, to the effect that the sons are only responsible for the share of their father when the debts are the joint debts of their father and others, and if two brothers have a joint debt, the son of the sarvivor is not bound for more than the father's share (Vivada Chintamani, Tagore's Translation, pages 34-35). It is argued from this that the liability of the different branches of the family is a several liability which cannot support a charge upon the joint family property of the members as a whole. In the present ease, bowever, the debt was incurred by each of the beads of the four different branches of the joint family and all the other defendants are their sons or grandsons so that all the interests were involved. There seems to me, therefore, to be no reason why the charge should not be binding upon the property in the hands of all the defendants. Mcreover, the dostrine of antecedent debt in so far as it enables the debtor to sharge the family property during his life-time so as to bind his sons' interest is not just fied by the actual text of the Mitakshara. It is a modern development of the pious obligation of the sons to pay their father's debte, an obligation which according to the text of the commentators only arises after the father's death but which comparatively recent times formed the basis of an exception to the general rule that the manager of a Mitakehara family cannot validly alienate the family property purposes unconnected with the needs of the family or the benefit of the estate. The dostrine is too well-established at the present day to admit of its being questioned by a reference to the texts of the commentators. Admitting that it applies only as against the sons and grandsons of the debtor and could not apply so as to permit of a valid charge on the family property where the interests of colleterals are involved, nevertheless, where all the adult members of the family are themselves the debtors and the only other persons interested are their minor sons or grandsons. I can see no reason why the dostrine should not be applied. Although, so far as I am aware, the objection now raised has not hitherto been the subject of express decision there are many instances in reported eases where the dostrine of antecedent debt has been applied in eireum. staness similar to the present. [see Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Giria Koer (7), Khalilul Rahman v. Gobini Pershad (c)]. In my opinion the app-llants' contention on this part of the case fails. It follows, therefore, subject to the question of interest that in 30 far as the claim for Rs. 2,13,8,8 retained in disabarge of the previous bond is soncerned, the mortgage creates a valid charge upon the estate, and it is namessarary to consider how far this sum can be justified by family necessity.

With regard to the balance of Rs. 1,36,142 representing the each enaideration for the bond in suit the learned Sabordinate Judge considered that the bulk of this amounting to Rs. 1,23,178-4-0 was justified by legal necessity or anteredent debt and included it together with the amount due under the previous bond in the mortgage deares, giving personal deeree for the balance of Rs. 12,963-11 3 with interest, considering that the plaintiffs had failed to establish legal necessity for the latter sum which had been taken for the personal purposes of the borrowers. The deduction of this sum from the mortgage decree was not challenged by the respondents and there is no sross. appeal. The appellants, however, contend that the greater part of the cash consideration included in the mortgage decree cannot be justified either on the ground of family necessity or antecedent debt.

Evidence has been given in great detail relating to a large number of items of debt which were discharged out of the each advance. Seventeen items including the principal and interest due on the previous band are set out in Schedale No. 1 of the bond in suit and amount together to Rs. 3,10,763 9.5. To most of these items, however, must be added interest up to the date when they were paid off out of the consideration money obtained for that purpose. Other debts not shown in the schedale were proved amounting to Re 10,573 which were paid off out of the amount advanced. In addition the cost of the stamp for the bond, the writer's remuneration and the registration fee were paid and proved. The total sum thus accounted for inelading the sum due under the previous bond and after adding interest on the sebedoled debts amounted to Rs. 3,37,036 4 9 for which the Subordinate Judge gave a mortgage-decree with interest at the bond rate leaving a balance of Ba. 12,953-11 3 taken for personal purposes of the borrowers and not assounted for. The various items shewing the payments of the debts out of the consideration money for the bond have been set out in tabular form and printed by the respondents in the schedules marked Gand H which have proved very useful for purposes of reference during the hearing of the appeal. It will be useful here to set ont an analysis of the different items shew. ing how the total is arrived at :-Ra

With regard to the second item representing the antecedent debts incurred by the four branches of the family, I have already held that the dostrine of antesedency applies. This sum includes the items numbered 2, 9,10, 11, 13, 14 and 17 set out in the Sebedule No. 1 of the bond which when the interest at the date of the bond is added amount to Rt. 15,573 and a further debt of Rs. 1,000 under a rolar (Exhibit 4 K) which was proved but not included in that schedule. With regard to the 17th item in the schedule amounting with interest to Rs. 21,570 8.0 the appellants took a This sum was due to farther point. Marwari under a roker Ram Anand (Ethihit 4 J) dated the 2 th Aughan 1304F. (10ch Dase nhar 18 6 A. D). It was a coneelidation of 14 earlier rokars of various deb's between September 1833 and September 1896 some of which were stated in the roker to be for each for meeting necessary expenses, others for the pries of sloth and one small sum of Rs. 265.90 for the price of gold apparently for ornaments. The original rotars were for sums borrowed by one or other of the heads of the family but never by all four and it was only on the 10:h December 1:96 that they all acknow. leged their joint liability for these sams. There ean be no doubt that at that time the negotiations for the loan from the respondents were going on, if not actually empleted and the stamp for the bond had in fact been purchased. It would be difficult in my opinion to find that the transaction of the 10th December was dissociated in fast from the mortgage trans-These debte were sonsolidated astion. under the general transaction creating a joint liability so near the date of the mortgage that it can bardly be said to be dissociated in point of time. I think that the only reliable inference to draw is that the respondents when they undertook a joint liability had in mind the necessity of ereating such a liability in order to obviate any question in future as to their right to charge the family estate with It was Surjya Narain the mortgagee himself who discharged this debt and he must have been aware of the circumstances under which the rokar of the 10th December came into existence or at least had sufficient information to put him upon enquiry as it refers to the previous rotars. I am of opinion that the transaction of the 10th December in itself affords no justification for a sharge upon the family property on the ground of antecedent deb). Thie, however, does not conclude the case. It is necessary to HARI PRASAD SINGHA C. SOURBEDRA MOHAN SINHA.

consider how far the original loans consolidated in the rokar of the 10th Dacember can be justified on the ground of legal recessity. There is evidence to shew that the mortgagee made exhaustive enquiries upon the evidence supplied him by the mortgagors as to the existence of this and other debts stated to be due, and on referring to the different rokars conthe transaction of the solidated under 10th December it appears that the sums borrowed are in almost every ease stated to be for meeting necessary expenses or for urgent necessity. In one case the sum of Rs. 500 was advanged to Gajadher Singh, the defendant No. 3, without any statement as to the purpose for which it was borrowed (Exhibit 4 B. B.) In another case Rs. 15 was borrowed by Maba Prasad without stating the reason (Exhibit 4 M. M.) and in a third case Re. 200 was taken in eash by Maha Prasad without stating the reason (Exhibit 4 O. O.). The bond in suit recites that the advance was required to enable the mortgagors to repay the dues of ereditors and to meet the necessary expenses of the family and no evidence has been called on tehalf of the appellants to prove that the debts were not insurred to meet the family recessities, Whilst it is true that the onus of proving such necessity lay upon the respondents, one must not lose sight of the fast that they had the assurance of the borrowers that the debts incurred were for family necessity and they made exhaustive erquiries as to the existence of these debts which undoubtedly amounted to a very large sum, and even if a few small items cut of the total might appear to be doubtful, I do not think we should scrutinise with meticulous care after a lapse of twenty years each small item about which the existence of family necessity is doubtful so as to give to the appellants the benefit of the doubt when the enquiries made by the respondents must have shewn that the vast bolk of this particular debt appeared to have been insurred for family necessity and was subsequently acknowledg. ed as a joint debt by the four respensible heads of the different branches of the family. I shall refer to this question further when considering the next item.

As to the sum of Rs. 62,733 the antecedent debts insurred by one or other of the different members of the family. this is comprised of over 20 different items including nine of the items set out in the sebedule to the bond, namely, those numbered 3 to 8, 12, 15, and 16. The scheduled items together with interest up to the date of payment account for over Rs. 52,100. There can be no doubt that these debts, as well as the balance making up the sum of Rs. 62,736 existed and were earrying interest at a much larger rate than that stipulated in the bond. were incurred sometime in the name of one of the adult members of the family, frequently in the name of three but never apparently of all four. The rokars in each ease have been produced and they refer to transactions between the years 1894 and 1896. From these and from the evidence given on behalf of the respondents it appears that far the greater portion of the debts were incurred in connection with the marriage eeremonies of different members of the family and for Dwiragaman and Upanyan esremonies. In other eases they were for household expanses and for purposes of sultivation. The household expenses were the ordinary tradesman's bills for sugar, spices and similar articles ineluding a few household utensils and some eloth. The marriage and other eeremonies account for roughly Rs. 40,000, the household expenses amount to between thirteen and fourteen thousand rupees. There are also certain items for each borrowed for purposes which are not clearly explained, The latter in particular have been challenged as not being justified by legal necessity. They come to Rs. 9,335. In so far as the debts incurred for the marriage and other ceremonies and the house. hold expenses are conserned, I think those may fairly be taken to some under the heading of necessary expenses of the family. It may be asked why in the space of two years it was necessary to incur debts for such purposes amounting to rather more than a year's income, but it must be remembered that since 1883 when the first mortgage-bond was executed in order to raise money for litigation in connection with the original asquisition of the estate, this family had always been in debt and was paying large sums periodically for interest on the loans. Between 1894 and 1895 about Rs. 35,000 were paid as interest on the previous bond and the re sources of this large family were consequently restricted. The marriage of the younger members had to be provided for and the sustom of conducting such seremonies with come estentation is a well recognised feature of the social conditions existing in this country. According to western ideas it may seem improvident but western standards of economy afford no eriterion for determining the necessary requirements of an Indian family in the position of the appellants. Their prestige as Zemindars of some position demands, and their friends expect, an amount of display in such seremonies which might appear lavish and unnecessary for people of similar means in western countries. I do not think that having regard to the drain then existing upon the income of the family which was according to the evidence in round figures about Rs. 40,000 a year, it can be said that these expenses ought to have been met out of the income or that they were in themselves excessive and they are expenses which do not srice every year but only upon occasions when the younger members of the family are of marriageable age.

With regard to the items for which each was borrowed for purposes not elearly shown by the evidence, these appear from sertain rokars which have been produced and marked as exhibits in the essa.. The exhibits in question are those marked 40, 40, 41, 4r, and 4xx. They were paid off in December 1896 at the time when the bond was executed and the money advanced, and the amount is stated to be Rs. 9,335. It appears from the rokars that there were sums borrowed in two cases by Ram Charan Singh and others in two cases by Hari Prasad Singh and in one case by Rim Charan Singh alone. The lenders are in some cases dead and the only evidence we have about them is that the some were borrowed by the members of the family whose names appear on the rokars and who had been in the habit of effecting such loans for family purposes,

Had the mortgage been granted for an advance to pay off these debts alone, it might have been difficult upon this evidence to find that they were in fast justified by family necessity, but it must be remembered that these sums were borrowed about twenty years before the suit was instituted. The original mortgagee is dead as well as others who might have been able to throw some light upon the exact purpose for which the loans were taken. Moreover, the defendants themselves who admit that they have accounts which might throw some light upon the transactions have not produced these accounts and have given no evidence in support of the contention that there was no legal necessity for the loans. This was a matter within their own special knowledge and the representation made at the time of the loan the debts were insurred for necessities of the family and the evidence shows that bona fide enquiries were made at the time by the lender as to the nature and existence of these debts. But the eirenmstances under which the family found itself at that time must also not be lost sight of. Its history has been dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge and need not be repeated here. It is the story of a collateral branch of a family living in comparative obscurity and poverty suddenly finding themselves within measurable dist. ance of comparative wealth through the death of the maternal great-grand-father without male issue. Opposition to their elaim is made by the alleged adopted son of the maternal ancestor's second wife resulting in litigation and an eventual compromise by which the family secured a substantial share of the estate. This is followed by further litigation to defend the property so acquired against the claims of other relatives of the original holder and still further litigation to get rid of ensumbraneers. To find money for the purposes of litigation in the first instance borrowing is resorted to and the family income is largely diverted towards paying interest on the loans which are renewed from time to time and further sums are borrowed for the purposes of maintaining the family. The loans began in 1883 and ended in 1896 when the bond now in suit was executed. At that time in addition to the indebtedness under the previous bonds amounting to over two lakes of rupees debts had been incurred the nature of which I have already referred to of well over a lakh. The great majority of these were debts manifestly falling either within the category of antecedent debts or debts incurred for family necessities and recourse is again had to the money-lender, who, the evidence shows, satisfied himself as to the existence of the debts and their nature after an exhaustive enquiry. He was also assured that the creditors were pressing for payment and that the debts were those of the family and for legal necessities. I am satisfied that bona file enquiries were made by the lender and that the enq iries show that in the vast majority of cases the debis were such as to lay the foundation for a valid sharge upon the family property. If twenty years later it should appear that in a few instances there is no conclusive proof that the debts were actually incurred for family neceseity or with the active participation of all the adult members of the family, still if the circumstances show that the needs of the family were such that it is probable that the money even in these cases was required for family necessities, I do not think we should require absolute proof in every case but may presume that the lender satisfied himself at the time that the debts were of such a nature as been represented to him and as appears from the recitals in the bond. In these eirenmstances I think the silence of the defendants as to the nature of these deb:s is not without significance, and may be taken into account as affording some presumption in favour of the plaintiffs, In the eireumstances I am not prepared to differ from the Subordinate Judge upon this part of the case. I may add that in the previous suit which proved infrustuous no such defence was set up although it would have been easier at that date to have determined by evidence the exact purpose for which these doubtful sums were borrowed.

With regard to the stamp-fee on the bond and the registration fee, these items are not challenged. The writer's remuneration amounting to Rs. 1,750 which was the same as the stamp duty has been challenged as exorbitant and unnecessary. At first eight this would certainly appear shows that it is customary in such cases to pay the writer a fee of not less than the stamp duty on the bond, and I see no reason for differing from the decision arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge upon this question.

The sixth and last point raised by the appellants relates to that part of the decree whereby the learned Judge allowed interest on the amount of the personal decree and costs in respect thereof at the rate of 6 per cent, per annum until real zation.

It is not very clear why the learned Judge awarded interest only upon the amount of the personal deeree and not on the amount of the mortgage-decree but there is no cross-appeal on this question. I think there is much to be said for the argument that the Southal Parganas Regulation applies only to the interest to be decreed under the bond and does not limit the powers of a Court under section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code to award interest on the deeretal amount notil real zation. But it has been held in this Keshobati Kumari v. otya Court in Niran an Chakraberty (9), that interest under the Code should not be awarded upon the decretal amount in so far as it includes interest on the principal debt or loan bat only upon the amount of the principal debt itself as to do so would contravene the provisions of the Regulation relating to compound interest The principle underlying this desision applies equally where the amount decreed as interest already equals the sum advanced. Although I have some doubt as to the propriety of the decision mentioned, I am not prepared to differ from the conclusion there arrived at and I think we should follow that decision,

The result of my judgment is that the appeal is allowed in part and that the decree of the lower Court must be modified in accordance with the above findings.

There will be the usual mortgage decrea for the amount of the principal sum advanced as shewn below together with a like amount as interest thereon after giving eredit for the sums already paid in respect of principal and interest. The total sums advances were Rs. 2,85,903.1.9 of which Bs. 12,000 were re paid on the 13th January 18 4, leaving a balance of Rs. 2,73, 03-1.9. From this must be deducted the sum of Rs. 12,963 disallowed by the Sub ordinate Judge as not justified by legal necessity for which there will be a personal decree with interest to a like amount after deducting the proportion of interest already paid as shewn below. The total paid was Rs. 1, 16,352-7-1 but Rs. 400 of this must be allocated to the R. 12,000 on the 13th January 1884 paid off leaving a balance of Re. 1,35,952 7.1 difficulty arises as- to how much of this should be deducted from the interest payable under the mortgage-deeree and the interest payable under the personal decree As the amount of the personal decree deducted from the cash advance made at the date of the last bond on the 21st Desember 1886 it would appear that the interest paid before that date under previous bones should be allocated to t e previous advances which are included in the mortgage-feeres. After deducting the Rs. 40) already mentioned this amounts to Rs. 83,704 3 6 the balance paid since that date amounting to Re. 55,248-3.7 should be deducted rateably from the amount of interest payable under the mort. gage decree and the personal decree, that in the proportion 18 to 887, which Rs 2,60,940 bears to Rs. 12,96 t.

I see no reason for departing from the ordinary rule as to costs. I think the appellants who have reduced the amount awarded against them from something like 15 lakes to something like 5 lakes are entitled to their proportionate costs of this appeal.

Buckettl, J.—This was an appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of the First Court of Bhagalour given on the 17th June 1918. The general circumstances which gave rice to the present litigation are of a very simple kind. They present many features which are familiar in the Courts of this and other Provinces and they raise questions which perhaps unfortunately, in the present which perhaps unfortunately, in the present of the law relating to the position of the joint Hadu family, occupy and must continue to occupy, unless and until this branch of Hindu Law is further explained by judicial decisions or clarified by litigation, much of the time of the judiciary.

In this ease are to be found factors of very usual type, an action brought by the plaintiffs on a mortgage-bond purporting to be executed in the plaintiffs' favour by some members of a joint family of Hindus subject to the Mitakshara Law on their own behalf and as guardians of minors and entered into for the purpose of giving to the plaintiffs seenrity for large sums of money lent by the plaintiffs to some of the defendants. Again also is to be found the usual defence (which always demands, as the law is at present constituted laborious investigation) of the enggestion by sertain members of the joint defendant family that the debts contracted were not debts of necessity or for the family benefit and cannot be supported by any adaptation of the modern dostrine of antecedent debt. In this particular ease there are, however, other special and somewhat peculiar features which raise points of considerable difficulty and interest. It is desirable, therefore, at this stage to give in some slight detail a short summary of the events which gave rise to the present suit.

There are three plaintiffs in this action, the first is the son of one Rai Surya Narayan Sioha Bahadur whilst the second and third are the grandsons of the same gentleman, There are a large number of defendants but so far as is material here, they may be grouped as being the descendants of, or deriving their title by purchase from, the descendants of one Balbbadra Singh. The second defendant died shortly before this appeal came on for hearing. Tois ancestor Balbhadra Singh left tores sons Ram Charan Singh, Gara Charan Singh, and Maha Prasad Singh, all of whom are now deat, the defendants are substantively their descend. ants or purchasers therefrom. It is at the moment unnecessary to refer closely to the way in which the defendants acquired the property which they owned, it is sufficient merely to mention that it has been referred to in these proceedings under the name of "The Bereope Estate." It was a valuable property and is said to have brought in a enasiderable insome of batween possibly Rs. 40,000 and Rs. 50,000 per annum. defendant family, however, never, although no precise allegations of extravagance are now persisted in against any of its members, seems to have been able to live without insurring debt, and for many years, extending back as far as 1:83, there was a long course of dealing between the plaintiffs' predecessor, Rai Surya Narain Sinha Bahadur, and the defendant family. These transactions consisted substantially of a sequence of loans to the defendant family by the plaintiff's predecessor and their nature is conewbat unusally fully recorded in a series of mort. gage bonds, most of which show the common place features of the adding of accrued interest to the amount secured by the previous bonds coupled with the addition of a further sum of money advanced to the The bond which is now being sued family. upon is dated the 21st December 1896 and was in favour of Rai Surya Narain Sinha Babadur for the sum of Rs. 3,50,000 at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, compound interest with yearly rests. It was entered into by Ram Charan Singh and Maha Pracad Singh, two sons of the common accestor Balbhadra Singh, by Hari Prasad Singh and Biswa Nath Singh two sons of the remaining, and at that time, deseased son of Balbhadra Singh, whose name as mentioned above, was Gurn Charan Singh, by Gajadhar Singh and Rup Narain Singh, sons of Ram Charan Singh by Sasi Bhusan Singb, son of Maha Prasad . Singl; by three minors through their father Hari Prasad Singh and by one ninor through his father, Biswa Nath Singh. It may perhaps be hardly necessary to point out that since the date of this bond numerous other births bave taken place in the family which feature accounts partially for the increased number of defendants of whom however Nos. 19 to 42 are purchasers or transferees. Defendant No. 18 was once a member of the joint family but was adopted out of it. It may perhaps be convenient here, in view of the fast that they will have to be referred to at a later stage, to give a list of the bonds representing the which constituted the transactions between the parties. The first bond (Erhibit 3c) was dated the 3rd Ostober 1883 the amount advanced was Rs. 73,000 and the rate of interest was 12 per cent, compound with yearly rests. The second bond (Exhibit 3b) was dated the 20th Septem. ber 1888, and was an entirely disconnected transaction, the money was borrowed to meet Government and settlement expenses and the validity of this transaction is not challenged. It was for Rs. 12,000, at 11 per sent. compound interest with yearly rests. The third bond (Exhibit 3F) consolidated these two previous leans together with a seriain amount of accrued interest. It was dated the 12th May 1890, and was for Rs. 95,600 at 10 per cent. compound interest with yearly rests. The 4th bond (Exhibit 3E) was dated the 29th September 1891, and was for Rs. 1,67,000, of which Rs. 64,761:1.9 constituted a fresh advance, the remainder representing a renewal of the old loan with such interest as had accrued. It bore compound interest at 9 per cent. with yearly rests. The 5th bond (Exhibit I) which is the one upon which action was brought in this case, war, as already mentioned, dated the 21st December 1896 for a sum of Rs. 3,50,000 of which Rs. 1,36,142 represents a fresh loan, the remainder being, as in the previous case, a renewal of the previous bond. By it the mortgagees bypothecated a large quantity of property in the Sonthal Parganas and a small quantity in the District of Bhagalpur, it bore compound interest at 71 per cent. It may be mentioned that quite considerable suras were at different periods paid off by the defendant family by way of interest.

It will be at once observed that it cannot be contended that the rates of interest charged were in any way of an extravagant description; but it must be mentioned that at the date of the suit, the claim had reached the large figure of Rs. 11,81,811 and the amount had swollen considerably by the date the suit was heard. Indeed it may also be noted here that the Subordinate Judge decided substantially entirely in favour of the plaintiffs awarding them a sum of some Re. 15,27,997 as against the family defendants together with a personal desree of some Rs. 44,134-7-5 together with costs. It is from this deeree that this appeal The records has now been prosecuted. printed for the purpose of this appeal are so massive that it will probably be advantageous at once to endeavour to set out with precision the points which have been very ably argued on the part of HARI PRISAD SINGAL U. SOUBBNDRA MOHAN SINHA.

the appellants, i.e., the defendants. They

(1) Aggestion relating to jurisdiction. This arises in the following way. The Baraope estate is situated in the locality known as the Sonthal Parganas, an area ramovad, broadly speaking, from the operation of ordinary law in many respects and governed largely by special Regulations (which have been varied from time to time) known as "the Regulations for the Pease and good Government of the Territory known as the Sonthal Pargans." So far as this question of jurisdiction is material here Regula. lation No. V contemplated that no suit connected with land should be heard in any Civil Court other than the special Courts provided under the Regulation so long as the place had not emerged from what is here known as the process of "Settlement", that is to say, until the completion of the territorial and revenual survey. It is argued here that it is not certain that the area within which the Barespe estate was situated was actually clear from this embargo, and it may conveniently be pointed out here also that in an earlier action brought by the plaintiffs in 1904 upon the same bond as that now sued upon, the defendant was successful on this self same ground.

(4). A question arising as to the amount of interest which can be elaimed by the plaintiffs. Here again this point arises out of the special arrangements made applieable to the Sonthal Parganas under the Regulations mentioned above. By Regulation VI, which purports to be directed against usury, there are certain very important limitations laid down prohibiting invarious ways the amount of interest which ean be elaimed within the area in question. It is argued here that these Regulations are applicable in this case, and indeed, this pointwas, together with the question of jurisdiction, a subject of considerable discussion in the previous astion to which reference already been made when it oams before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council,

. (3) A question arising as to whether this suit is not, under certain peculiar eireumstances, barred by the operation of the provisions of the Limitation Ast. The point arises in this way. The present suit was sommensed on the 5th; February: 1915, at shild in existence, who is said to have been born in about 1910, whose name was Sripati Singh. He was the son of Sasi Bhuean Singh and a grandson of Maha Prasad Singb, he was not joined as a party in the proceeding until the 30th May 1916. The plaintiffs etate that as soon as they discovered the existence of this child, they took the step of having him joined in proper manner, and in fact he was, at the date given above, put on the record under the order of the Court as defendant No. 16 (a). The date upon which payment of the bond was strictly due was the 14th March 1903 and it is argued that as more than 12 years had elapsed from that date before the child was joined, the suit would be barred by the provisions of the Limitation Act on the ground that it was obligatory that he, having an interest in the right of redemption of the mortgage, was a necessary party to the suit.

(4) A question as to the non existence of legal nesessity or family benefit for a large portion of the loan in question. This contention involved before the Subordinate Judge a very oareful consideration of the elements of which the loan was in fact composed, and it has also been the subject of labourious enquiry and research before this Court. In cases. such as these, where, in order to find the actual origin of portions, very often emall and very often numerous of what is a large aggregate sum of money, one has to try to trace it back for a great many years, it is frequently almost impossible to deal with each individual item in any very satisfactory manner, and indeed, it is probably doubtful if it is right or necessary so to do. The Sabordinate Judge took the broad view that in the main old loans contrasted for the purpose of paying off earlier debts of a composite character should be regarded earrying their own barden of proof that they fell, roughly speaking, within the sonfines of what may properly be regarded as legal necessity or family benefit.

(5). A question arising as to how far the provisions of this bond are eapable of being enforced against the defendant family under the dostrine of antesedent debt. It is argued here that the dostrine of antecedent debt only applies when the exact relation. ship of father and son is present. It is suggested that a man who is a member of a that time it is admitted that there was a joint Hindu family subject to the Mitakehara. HARI PRASAD SINGHA U. SOURBNDRA MOHAN SINHA.

Law, cannot in any way bind his nephew. It is freely admitted that some of the debts which were originally contracted and which purported to be met by their entry into the bond sued on or in connection with the previous bonds, were contracted nominally, sometimes by one, sometimes by another and sometimes by a combination of the heads of the family; and the contention here put forward is that in cases where any particular original debt purported to be contracted by, for example, one member of the family, such a transaction cannot, on the doctrine of antecedent debt, be held to bind the nephews of the person who contracted such a debt but only to bind his sons.

(6). A question as to the barring of the claim for a personal decree by the provisions of Order II, rule 2 of our Civil Procedure

Code.

Before dealing with these points in detail, it is necessary to ascertain what was really the position of the defendant family with regard to their possession of the property in question, for it has been seriously suggested that they were not a joint family at all so far as this property is concerned. The facts, however, with regard to this matter are not complicated.

A certain Raja Ajit Barham was the proprietor of the Barcope property, and at his death left two widows, the Rances Dilabati, and Bhulanbati, who succeeded to the estate. Upon the decease of the Rani Dilabati, Rani Bhulanbati came into possession of the whole property and on her death the Court of Wards took possession of it on behalf of one Babu Chander Deyal Barham, a son of Mongal Barham, on the ground that it was alleged that he had been adopted by the Rani Bhulanbati as son to her deceased husband. Now, Ram Charan Singh, Guru Charan Singh and Maha Prasad Singh, the three sons of Balbhadra Singh had as their mother one Musammat Parbati who was a daughter of Raja Ajit Barham, and they brought a suit for recovery of the estate from the Court of Wards, joining in their action the sons of another daughter of Raja Ajit Barham. The suit was compromised, Guru Charan, Ram Charan and Maha Prasad Singh obtaining 7 annas 171 gundas share of the Barcope Raj whilst Chandra Dayal Barbam obtained a 4-annas share. It would appear that in this litigation these three men incurred legal expenses in order to pay which they had to borrow. [See Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyan (10), Mohaber Roser v. Joobha Singh (11)].

Subsequent to this compromise, these three men became involved in another piece of litigation, one Batan Barham and other relatives of the deceased Raja Ajit Barbam having unsuccessfully brought a suit against them and others for the passession of the Raj and here again further legal expenses were necessarily incurred. I think that there can be no doubt that the property having been thus asquired through their mother it sould not be regarded, when it reached the hands of Balbhadra Singh's three sons, as their joint aneestral family property; [Venkayyamma Giru v. Venkata. ramanayyamma Bahadur Garu (12), Atar Singh v. Thakar Singh (13), Bishwanath Prasad Sahu v. Gojadhar Prasad Sahu (14)], butl think that from an examination of what these men themselves stated in various bonds into which they entered that, as the Subordinate Judge has found, they undoubtedly elested to treat the estate, which they had thus acquired, as joint family property. In the first bond of 1883 which was entered into with the plaintiffs' predecessor by Ram Charan Singh for himself and as karta of the joint family for his minor sons Gajadhar Singh and Rup Narain Singh and for his nephew, the son of Guru Charan Singh, and by Hari Prasad Singh for himself and as guardian of his brother, Biswanath Singh and on behalf of his own minor son Lakhi Prasad Singh, and by Maba Prasad Singh for himself and as guardian of his son, Sasi Bhusan Singh, the facts as to the way in which they had acquired the property are very fully set out, and it is there stated that the properties and family of the deceased lady Musammat Parbati are joint, In clause 3 of that bond it is etated that although the properties they asquired were not the properties of their father and that although in consequence the sons during the lifetime of Ram Charan Singh and Maha Prasad Singh had no interest thereir, yet all the debts were in fact contracted for val d and legal necessities. In the second bond, entered into in 1:88 we find it is executed by Ram Charan Singh in his own right and as karta of the joint family on behalf of his minor son and on behalf of his naphew Biewanath Singh, by Hari Peasad Singh for himself and as guardian of his brother, Biswa Nath Singh and also on behalf of his own son and by Maha Prasal Singh both for himself and as guardian of his minor son, and they mortgaged their whole share in their estate declaring thomselves to be jointly and severally liable for the entire debt. In the third bond of 1890 executed by Ram Charan Singh for himself and his son Rup Narayan, by Hari Prasad Singh for himself and his son, by Biswa Nath Singh, by Maha Prasad Singh for himself and his own son, and by Gajadhar Singh son of Ram Charan Singh they again deslared themselves to be jointly and severally liable in mort. gaging their Zamindari property. In the 4th bond of 1831 executed again by Ram Oharan Singh for himself and his minor son Rup Narayan Singh, by Hari Singh for himself and his two minor sons, by Biswa Nath Singh, by Maha Prasad Singh for himself and his minor son and by Gajadhar Prasad Singh, they again mortgaged their Zimindari property and for the debt they declared themselves to be jointly and severally liable; whilst in the bond now sued upon entered into by Ram Charan Singh, by Maba Prasad Singh, by Hari Prasad Singh, by Biswa Nath Singh, by Gajadbar Prasad Singb, by Rup Narayan Singh, by Sasi Bhusan Singh, Likhi Prasad Singh, Bishen Prasad Singh and Dwarks Prasad Singh, under the guardianship of their father Hari Prasad Singh and by Tilokenath Singh under the guardianship of his father Biswa Nath Singh, there is an express deslaration that all the executants members of a joint Hindu family, here they again mortgaged their properties deslared themselves to be jointly and severally liable for the debt, and in clause 9 add "we have not transferred the same in any way before this and that we have absclate right thereto". I think that it must be taken that for the purpose of this suit it is quite clear that the property in question must be regarded as joint family property and subject to the appropriate incidents of Hindu Law attaching thereto

I now propose to endeavour to deal with the question of jurisdiction. This suit was instituted in the Court at Bhagalpur, which is in this province. The properties which were mortgaged by the plaintiffs' predecessor to the defendants were very largely situated in the Southal Parganas District and only a small portion lay within the district of Bhagalpur, Under section 5, sub-section (1) of the Southal Perganas Regulation, it is laid down that "from the date on which under section '9' (to which reference will be made presently) of the Regulation, the Lieutenant-Governor declares by a Notifica. tion in the Calcutta Gasetts, that a settlement shall be made of the whole or any part of the Southal Parganas until the date on which such Settlement is declared, by a like Notification, to have been empleted, no suit shall lie in any Civil Court established under the Bangal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act of 1887, in regard to

"(a) any land or any interest in, or arising out of land, or

" (b) the rent or profits of any land, or

"(c) any village headship or other office connected with any land,

"in the area sovered by such first mentioned notification nor shall any Civil Court proceed with the hearing of any such suit which may be pending before it."

Whilst by sub sestion (2) it is enacted that between the dates referred to in subsection (1) all suits of the nature therein described shall be filed before or transferred to an officer appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor under section 2 of the Southal Parganas Act, 1855, or section 10 of this Regulation ascording as the Lieutenant-Governor may from time to time direct and such officer shall hear and, even though during the hearing the settlement may be deleared to have been completed, determine them,"

HART PRISAD SINGHA D. SOURENDEA MOHAN SINHA.

Section 9 lays down "the Lieutenant-Governor may from time to time, by notification in the Calcutta Gazette, declare that a settlement shall be made of the whole or any part of the conthal Parganas for the purpose of ascertaining and recording the various interests and rights in the lands."

It is unnecessary to consider here what is the precise meaning of this section, for the matter has already been dealt with by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, as I have already had ossasion to mention in a case brought in connection with this bond now suad by and against upon substantially the same parties in the year 1904, being decided, however, in the Privy Council in 1914 Maha Prasid Singh v. Ramani Mohan Singh (1)]. It is saffisient to say here that it was held in that case that although it appeared that there had been a notification declaring that a settlement of the Sonthal Perganas was to take place, yet as no notification had issued that the settlement had been completed, the Court at Bhagalpur had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. It is, therefore, unnecessary for me to enter upon any close examination as to how it comes about that the Sontbal Parganas now falling within the Province of Bihar and Orissa, are amenable to the special Regulatione, which were in existence prior to the separation of this province from that of Bengal, or as to why suits, even of such large amount as the one in question, were under the eireumstances which existed when the case dealt with by the Privy Council was instituted, still incapable of being tried other than by the Special Tribunals instituted under the Regulations, and it is common ground that it is sufficient here merely to ascertain whether any thing has happened since the date of the institution of the prior suit which indicates that settlethe Sonthal ment of such part of Parganas as include Barcope has since been completed. If that settlement has not been completed, it is obvious that the Court at Bhagalpur could not have entertained this suit; if, however, it has been satisfactorily shown or a suitable inference can be drawn that such settlement is now over, the question of jurisdiction must obviously be decided in favour of the plaintiffe. The Subordinate Judge has found against the defendants on this point. What really happened appears to have been that the Government many years ag declared a settlement of apparently the whole of the Sonthal Parganas which was commenced and carried on by a Mr. Wood from 1873 to 1879, there is no definite evidence to indicate that this Settlement was ever finally completed and no notification of completion has been discovered. It may have been that it was too great a task at that time and that it was in fact never completed or it have been that a notification of may completion or of a whole partial completion may have been in existence but has not been discovered, at any rate, what is certain is that, at later dates, the Government began to deal piece-meal with comparatively small areas of these Perganas notifying for settlement various places from time to time, the work was earried out by different persons at different periods, notably by Mr. Craven in 1892, Mr. H. McPherson between 1903 and 1.0 and Mr. Allanson between 1905 and 1903. It will be found that the Barcope estate was dealt with in there settlements to which I have referred. Subordinate Judge in dealing with this question says: "The plaintiffs have shown that though the settlement made by Mr. Wood, was completed, but not published, the Local Government brought the portion of Barcope, under settlement from time to time (vide the copies of the Calcutta Gazette filed in this respect on behalf of the plaintiffs) and finally published it after its completion. It is, therefore, clear that the Local Government has superseded the settlement completed by Mr. Wood and has not allowed it to exist in the eyes of law. I, therefore, reject the defendants' contention as frivolous."

I think that this is by no means an improper expression of what the real situation is. In 18:9 a Notification dated the 29th January of that year was issued by the Government of Bengal declaring that a settlement should be made of the villages comprised in certain scheduled estates amongst which was Tuppa Barcope (Exhibit 28). On the 10th September of the same year, however, this Notifisa. tion was amended and a corrected list of This included Taluk areas substituted. Barcope, or Tappa Barcope. Oa the let July 1892 (Exhibit 27) we find that Mr. Craven, the Settlement Officer, submits his final report upon this Settlement of the Taluke, HARI PRASAD SINGHA U. SOURENDRA MOHAN SINHA.

which included the Taluk Barcope (Exhibit 27) and on the 13th March 1893 (Exhibit 28b) appears a notification by the Government of Bengal declaring that Mr. Oraven's Settlement had been concluded and completed and in the list given is to be found the Barcope Tuppa. It will, however, be seen from Mr. Craven's report that the settlement proceedings were not of a precisely exhaustive character, and they were in part apparently completed later. On the 14th October 1903 there is a Notification (Exhibit 28 C) of the list of areas in which settlement has been completed which includes three villages in Tuppa Barsope, Again on the 25th October 1905 there is another Notification (Exhibit 29.D) declaring that there should be a revision of the settlement made in the ease of certain areas which included the Zamindari of Barsope, Touzi No. 481. On the loth September 1907 there is a further Notification (Exhibit 28-E) that a settlement thereof has now been completed and concluded. The list of places where settlement has been so effected includes a large number of places in Barcope, whilst on the 12th February 1910 a further Notification (Exhibit 28 F) of conelusion of settlement includes the estate of Barcope, Tonzi No. 481. 1

Now some endayour has been made by Counsel for the appellants to show that if one examines the reports of Mr. McPherson and Mr. Allanson and the number of villages which are there mentioned, one may find certain discrepancies in the number, and that it is, therefore, not clear that all the property duly and completely settled. has been I myself, however, think that this bas been a failure. endeavour eider that there was on the face of the doeumente, to which I have referred, a very elear indication that the settlement of the whole of the Barcope estate was in fact completed and although it may be that there is some little difficulty in following through and identifying each village (the names of which may be differently spelled at different times) and although there may be come further difficulty in reconciling exactly the numbers of villages which are sometimes referred to as having lain within the confines of the estate, I do not think that there is any satisfactory evidence to show that anything was left out of the settlement. Under these eirenmetaness it would appear that since the institution of the last suit the settlement has been concluded, and that consequently the difficulty which stood in the plaintiffs' way in the previous case as to the Court at Bhagalpur not having jurisdiction to deal with the matter, no longer, now applies. The following cases are of interest in connection with this point:

I now pass to the second and important question of interest.

Section 6 of Regulation III of 1872 of the Southal Perganas lays down the following order:—

"All Courts having jurisdiction in the Southal Perganas shall observe the following rules relating to usuary, namely :-

- (a). Interest on any debt or liability for a period exceeding one year shall not be decreed at a higher rate than two per cent, per mensem notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, and no compound interest arising from any intermediate adjustment of account shall be decreed;
- (b) the total interest decreed on any loan or debt shall never exceed one-fourth of the principal cum if the period be not more than one year, and shall not in any other case exceed the principal of the original debt or loan."

We get an explanation and illustration which are both such salient features of Indian additional legislation and which, as is sometimes the case, although intended to be of an explanatory character are so worded as to give rise to no little confusion. The Explanation and Illustration which were added in 1893 read thus:

"Explanation.—The expression intermediate adjustment of account in clause (a) of this section means any adjustment of account which is not final, and includes the renewal of an existing claim by bond, decree or otherwise when without the passing of fresh consideration, the original claim is increased by such renewal."

"Illustration.—A bond is given for Rs. 75, of which Rs. 25 are interest. Unless the obligee can prove to the satisfaction of the Court that he gave such consideration for the bond as rendered the transaction fair and equitable, of the Rs. 75, Rs. 50 only will bear interest, and the limit of the claim on the bond will be Rs. 100." The section is directed, according also to the side note, against usurious practices, and of course, the object of all this peculiar legislation of very paternal character which is operative in the District of the Sonthal Perganas was and is to protect the inhabit. ants there, who were of a simple type and backward culture, against what might appear to be the imposition of unsarapulous and adroit persons who might take advantage of processes available to them under the ordinary law. In Act No. XXXVII of 1855 we see in the greamble that it is stated that the ordinary law in force in the Presidency of Bengal is not regarded as being adaptable to the unsivilised race of people called Sonthals and in the Regulation, to which reference has already been made, one finds numerous instances in which it is endeavoured to safeguard the interests of these people of early culture. It is no doubt rather hard to reconcile the undertaking of great transactions in connection with these ideas of the protection of a primitive race but whilst, in the ordinary way one would have contemplated, as no doubt was the case, effairs only of small degree, the fact remains that as the settlement of the district proceeded, it was discovered that there existed persons possessed of large and valuable territorial rights. In the case now before us we have exhibited individuals, blessed with a large income and borrowing great sums of money, but there is nothing to indicate that the Regulation is other than of general application to all affairs of whatever magnitude conducted in the District. The broad contention which is put forward here on behalf of the appellants is that the Regulation which has been quoted above must here apply. The Subordinate Judge, however, did not think that the appellants could in any way take advantage of the provisions of this section VI of the Regulation. In the issues which were raised for his consideration, issue No. 11 was "are the plaintiffs entitled to compound interest, or interest exceeding the amount of the principal, keeping in view the section 6 of Regulation III of 1872 ?" In dealing with this issue, the Sabordinate

Judge writes in his decision, "the plaintiffs have successfully shown that the father of the plaintiff No. 1 lent the executants of the bond in suit Rs. 3,50,000, out of which Rs. 1,3,142 were paid to them in cash, the rest having been applied to the payment of their previous debts due to him and that when he did so, the terms of the 3rd and 4th bonds which were executed in his favour did not expire, and that he not only allowed the bonds to be renewed but also reduced the rate of interest thereof, the result of which has been that there has been a gain of over Rs. 12,000 to the executants of the bond in suit. It is, therefore, clear that the transaction under the bond has been fair and equitable within the meaning of the illustration attached to section 6 Regulation III of 1272. It appears that this question was not under controversy in the sait before the Judicial Committee and has not been judicially ensidered. This being so, I find that the plaintiffs are also entitled to the interest claimed within the meaning of the Illustration."

The Subordinate Judge did not think that there were any intermediate adjustments of account within the meaning of the Explanation attached to the section and considered that the plaintiffs had a right to recover the interest as claimed and he, therefore, found this issue against the defendants.

I greatly doubt whether the Subordinate

Judge is here correct.

The exast proposition which has been put forward by Counsel on behalf of the appellants is divisible into three definite suggestions, firstly, that the amount of interest which can be obtained by the plaintiffs cannot exceed the actual principal sums advanced, secondly, that the amount of interest which has been in fact paid must be deducted from that amount of money which, payable as interest, equals the amount of the principal loan, and thirdly, that interest cannot be granted on the decretal sum for any period after the date of the judgment if it would result in the amount thereby recoverable exceeding the total of the principal actually advanced. We are fortunately, I think, not altogether without authority on part of these questions. In the case to which reference has been made above in connection with the consideration of the questions of jarisdiction [Maha Praea! Singh v. Ramani Mohan Singh (1)], the general point has, to my mind, been the subject of what amounts to a judicial decieion. In the judgment of their Lordships delivered by Lord Moulton, it is stated that "Their Lordships are also of opinion that, apart from the question of jurisdiction, any Court dealing with the subject-matter of the suit would be bound to give full force and effect to the provisions of section of the Sonthal Perganas Settlement Regulation, 1872, relating to usury and, therefore, to have refused to decree any compound interest arising from any intermediate adjustment of interest, or an amount of total interest exceeding the principal of the original debt or loap."

Their Lordships also, in my view, disposed of the question (advanced here but not very strongly orged) as to how far section of the Regulation was observeable by Courts other than those which were physically situated in the District. Moulton states after quoting in extenso sestion 6 of the Regulation: "The respondents sought to establish that the phrase, 'all Courts having jurisdiction in the Southal Parganas' meant-Courts situated in the Sonthal Parganas and dealing with matters purely local." Their Lordships eannot accept this interpretation. The words are definite and presise, and must be applied in their na'ural signification. It was urged that taken literally they would apply to everything done by a Court having jurisdiction in the Southal Parganas whether the matter related to those districts or not, insamuch as the language used makes the application of the enactment depend on the Court and not on the matter in dispute. But this is to ignore the fact that the Regulation is only applicable to the Sonthal Parganas and that, therefore, it would not apply to Courts having jurisdiction wider than these local limits when such Courts were dealing with matters relating solely to other parts of India. The enactment, therefore applies to Courts baving jarisdistion in the Sonthal Parganas and acting under and by virtue of such jurisdiction."

I am bound to say that I think that Lord Moulton's dista in the earlier case relieve this Court from considering a question which, I em'ess, presents to me very considerable difficulty. Here there lie a series of bonds, the amount of what one may perhaps term the original debt, (that is to say, the actual fresh eash advanced) is not in dispute but with the exception of the second bond of 1886, which was, as I have mentioned before, an independent transaction, each of the five bonds which were consolidated eventually in the mortgage-bond which is now the subject of this suit, brought to itself an assumulation of interest coupled with au addition of a new advance and the accumulated interest was added to the old capital and with the fresh advance forms the aggregate sum for which the new bond is executed. I cannot but imagine that there proseed. ings constitute what I may term in the pharassology of the Regulation "intermediate adjustments", indeed I am not at all sure that each pause in compound interest, represanted by what is known as the "yearly rest," is not also an intermediate adjustment, and I am quite prepared to regard them as sush. For these reasons, I am afraid, I must hold that the plaintiffs cannot resover on their deerse a sum in excess of that which was astually advanced to them in oush which, I understand, amounts in all to the ennsiderable sum of about Rs. 2,85,000.

The second suggestion which is put forward on behalf of the appellants is that what has been in fast paid by way of interest must be deducted from the amount of interest to which the plantiffs are restrictto acitees edt to enoisiverq edt reban be the Regulation to which reference has been made. I cannot but think that this contention is sound, for if any really effective meaning is to be given to the restrictive character of the section of the Regulation under consideration, any other decision might result in absurdity, for example in the supposititious event of a borrower having paid to his lender a very large quantity of interest, he might yet be liable under any construction of the Regulation other than that which I think should be given to it, to pay further assumulated interest which might amount, together with what he had already paid, to far more than the aggregate of the original sum lent and this would be a result which would, in my opinion, be wholly inimical to the purview of this section 6 of the Regulation, I, therefore, have some to the conclusion that the amount of interest already paid must be deducted from the total sum claimed by the plaintiff HARI PRASAD SINGHA U. SODBENDRA MOHAN SINHA.

by way of interest. In this particular case the accumulations of interest are so great that they far exceed the original amounts from time to time lent and so the figure due is a matter of simple calculation.

The third suggestion made by the appellant is that no interest can be granted on the sum setually decreed after the date of judgment if, at any rate, that would result in the smount so recoverable exceeding the total of the principal actually advanced. Now in this Court in the ease of Keshoboti Kumari V. Sotya Niranjan Ohnkraberty (9) it has been in effect held that the incidents of ecction the Regulation pursue the deeretal sum; in this decision by Rce and Coutts, JJ., it was laid down that interest subsequent to the decree must be limited to interest on the principal advanced and the costs of the suit. If the operation of section 6 of the Regulation is thus after the decree applicable to the amount decreed, it must logically follow, if that view is correct, that when the interest accruing after the decree amounts, together with the interest already paid before or awarded by the deeree, to more than the principal, it must stop or if. as in this ease, the amount of interest already paid prior to and awarded bу the equals the principal, no more can corne the deeree. Had it not been for after this decision with this proposition I am not sure that I should have been content to agree. I should have felt inclined to think that when judgment has been given for a specific amount and for the right amount, interest at the usual judicial rate follows as a matter of coure, that the matter no longer lies within the embargo of the Sonthal Perganas Regulation but follows the normal course, and that even though by accumulation of interest after judgment the amount ultimately recoverable by way of interest may in fact exceed the total amount of the principal actually advarced, the position thus achieved is a regular one. In sonnestion with this question of interest one may refer to the following BABES: Shama Charon Misser V. Chuni Lal (17), Ram Chandra Markari v. Rani Keshobati Kumari (2) and on appeal Ram Chandra Marwari v. Rani Keshobati Kumari (18). Ramiban Shaha v. Dhiku ringh (19), Maha Prasad Singh v. Rumani Mohan Singh (1). Atikulla Munshi v. Azimuddin Haji (26). Chiran:ib Lal Choubey v. Musammat Doultea (21), Keshobati kumari v. Satya Niranjan Chakraberty (9). Having now dealt with the question of interest I pass to the third point, namely, as to whether the suit is affected by the Limitation Act.

The argument which is put forward on behalf of the appellants in connection with this point may be explained in the follow. ing manner. The bond upon which this action is now brought, was dated the 21st December 1896, and it is common ground that the right of action accrued on the 14th March 1:03. The last payment of interest was in fast made on 16th March 1902. The first suit was commenced on the 20th June 1904, it was dealt with in the Court of first instance on 12th February 1906 and was finally decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the . 9 May 1914. The present action was started on the 5th February 1915. It is admitted that about 1910 there was born to Sasi Bhusan Singh a son, whose name is Sripati Singh, and that this shild was not joined as a party to these proceedings until the 30th May 1916, when he was added as defendant No. 16 (a) by the Court's order. It is contended by the appellants that under the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 1, O vil Procedure Code, which reads: "Subject to the provisions of this Code, all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage," this Sripati Singh was a necessary party in the suit, and that as he was not joined until after the expiration of 12 years from the date when the right of action accrued, the suit must See Nanomi Babuasin V. It is agreed that the period of limitation applicable in this case is that of 12 years and it is also common ground that the child Sripati Singh is one of that class of persons contemplated by the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 1. To the argument addused by the appellants, the respondents put forward several suggested answers. In the first place, they say that the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule I are not such as necessarily entail the failure of a suit if a person who ought to be a party is not in fact joined but that the only result should be that as against such individual the deeree in the suit would not be binding. This point raises a question which is by no means free from difficulty; and with it too is involv. ed the point as to whether the omission to join Sripati Singh in this case was an act of negligence or not. It is noticeable that the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 1 reproduced with sertain alterations those of section to of the Transfer of Property Ast, IV of 18:2. This ran as follows:- "Subject to the provisions of the Oode of Civil Procedure, section 437 (now Order XXXI, rule 1), all persons having an interest in the property comprised in a mortgage must be joined as parties to any suit under this Chapter relating to such mortgage, provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest." It will be observed at once that this provise, as to the plaintiff having some notice of the interest of the individual who is not joined as a party to the suit, does not find place in the phraseology of Order XXXI, rule 4. In this particular sase the respondents alleged that, owing to the fast that this Scipati Singh did not reside with his parents, they were not aware of his existence until shortly before they actually caused him to be added as a party, and the Subordinate Judge has accept. ed this evidence, a conclusion with which I see no ground for disagreeing. He thinks that although the provise as to notice which existed in section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, is omitted from the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 1, it would be altogether unreasonable to suggest that where a necessary party has been, not through negligence but under circumstances which are properly explicable, omitted from being made a party to a suit, such non joinder would necessarily be a fatal bar to the progress of the action There ie, I must confess, much to be said in favour of this view. I take it that the principle which must underlie the idea that where there is a non-joinder of necessary parties the suit must fail must be that it is undesirable and contrary to public policy that the Courts should expend their time and energies in dealing with matters the jadgments upon which might, because they would not be binding upon necessary parties not joined, be infruetuous materially ineapable of effective enforcement. There are obviously in the class of cases to which this suit belongs, very considerable difficulties in the way of a p'aintiff, who really desires to know who are, and to join those who are necessary parties to his suit, for in a joint Hindu family, often composed of many adult members, there are and, during lengthy periods over which litigation of the sharaster is drawn out, must naturally be persons who from time to time have shildren. all of whom, presumably, on their birth acquire at once some kind of interest in the joint family property. It seems to me to be expecting almost too much to suggest that it is always possible for a plaintiff become arquainted immediately with the osenrrenes of such births; and the facts that they may not be so acquainted and that the defendants do not intimate the birth of another individual, who has an interest in the subject-matter of the action, should not. I think, be capable of being seized upon as an opportunity to the defendants for perchance availing themselves, owing to the non-joinder of such a child, of the highly technolal provisions of the Limitation Act. [See Kundan Lal v. Faqir Chand (35), Raghoram Singh v. Ra ani Kanta Banerjee (36), Raghunandan Singh v. Parmeshwar Dayal Singh (37)].

However, in this case, there are other contentions on behalf of the respondents. which are, perhaps of more general value to In the first place, they call into aid provisions the of section 14 of Limitation Act, IX of 1903. Sub-section (1) of sestion 14 reads thus: -"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Jourt of Appeal, against the defendant, shall be excluded, where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like cature is unable to entertain it."

There was placed before us a good deal of technical argument as to the precise construction of this section. See Ali Saheb v. Reji Ahmed (3:), Bhoyelal v. Amritlal (39), Sundar Lal v. Chhitar Mal (1), Chuntlal Harilal v. Bai Mani (40)]. It must be remembered that the first suit was commenced on the 20th June 1904. It appears to me that it was clearly based upon the same cause of action and was certainly between substantially the same parties, allowance being made for devolution or transmissions of interest; there is also no doubt that it was on a question of jurisdiction that the suit could not be entertained, nor is there any contro. versy that the plaintiff's predecessor was prosecuting that suit bona fide and with diligence. Under these circumstances, there fore, I am of the opinion that the time under the Limitation Act did not begin to run against the respondents until after the decision in 1914 by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Conneil. There is a farther point which is raised by the respondents, which is of some importance and upon which I think it is desirable that I should express my view. It is that even though the name of Sripati Singh was placed upon the record after the expiration of the period prescribed by the Limitation Ast it was not in fast necessary that he should be joined at all, he being sufficiently represented by the many adult members of the joint family, who were already joined as parties to the suit. The Sabordinate Judge eonsiders that Sripati Singh was amply represented in the suit by his father until the date when he was joined. I am not prepared to subscribe exactly to the conslusion which the Sabordinate Judge has come, for it must be borne in mind that the interest of Sripati Singh was not the same as that of his father. but on the contrary opposed to that of his parent. [See Ajothya Roy v. Hirdwar Roy (24), Bal Kishan Lal v. Tapeswar Singh (41). Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (42), Ram iban Shah v. Dhiku Singh (19)]. Outheother hand, there were persons on the record with whose interests those of Sripati were identical and these persons may, I think, well be regarded as forming a class of which Sripati Singh was one and as for all practical purposes representing him adequately Vide Sheo Shankar Ran v. Jaddo Kunwar (43)]. For the above reasons, therefore, I have some to the conclusion that the arguments adduced in connection with limitation by the appellants must fail. I now pass to the fourth point which has engaged our attention for a very lengthy period. [See Huncomangersaud Panday v. Musammat Babioes Munrai Koonweree (44), Sinnachani v. This question is as to the non-existence of any legal necessity for a portion of the loan in question. Very laborious efforts have been made to trace back to their origin the different sums of money of which it is alleged that this loan Rs. 3,50,000 was composed. The Subordinate Judge has gone into this question in great detail. He has arrived at the conclusion after a careful examination, that, whilst in certain instances too great a period of time has elapsed for the plaintiffs indubitably to show that the debts incurred were for family reseasity, yet in the main the material evidence adduced shows that the bulk of the purpesss for which money was borrowed from the plaintiffs was undoubtedly such as would be regarded as being for legal necessity or family benefit and that proper enquiry was made there anent, and on this basis he decides substantially in favour of the plaintiffs with the exception of excluding a small sum of about Rs. 12,000 for which he only gives a personal decree. I think that the Subordinate Judge has taken, on the whole, a very proper view of the position. The loan contracted under the fifth bond was, as I have said, for Rs. 3,10,000. The way in which this cum is made up is detailed in the first schedule of the bond and it will be seen from that that Rs. 2,13,858 were appropriated towarde, what is in substance, a renewal of the 4th bond, both in respect of the capital and the interest which had assrued thereon, whilst with regard to the remaining sum of Rs. 1,36,142 that represented a variety of debts which purported to have been incurred by the adult members or some of them of the appellants' family for various purposes. It is a carious fact which has markedly engaged my attention to observe the method, in which throughout the whole course of this long stretching series of borrowings, sometimes all, sometimes some and sometimes one only of the adult members of the family insurred debts, (that is to say, signed dosuments of indebtedness for many kinds of different purposes); how these dabts are apparently always regarded by the other adult members of the family as having been insurred on behalf of the family and how those adult members of the joint family who had not participated in the actual execution of individual documents of indebtedness have been invariably preparad to shoulder the burden as a common one, as is seen by the inclusion of all such in the series of bonds of which mention has already been made, and in particular, in the list of debts annexed to the bond now sued upon included in the sum of Rs. 1,36,142 (which is the fresh money advanced by the plaintiffs to the defendants under the 5th bond, that is to say, the bond in suit); we find, in exemplification of what I have just stated, that some of the debts to which this new money is appropriated are evidenced by documents of indebtedness signed in some eases by four, in some cases by three, and in some eases by one of the adult members of the defendant family. Similarly, too, it will be observed that the purposes for which these debts (embracing the new loan in the 5th bond) purported to have been contracted, cover a wide range. I do not propose to deal wih all these debts in any great detail, but I think that it is necessary that I should refer to them shortly. The first is a debt of Rs. 7,000. t was exp ented by Ram Charan Singh, Maha Prasad Singh, Hari Prasad Singh and Biswanath

HARI PRASAD SINGHA U. SOURENDRA MOHAN SINHA.

Singh in favour of one Sheo Shanker Sabay and under it Rs. 7,000 are borrowed for the purpose of performing the marriage ceremonies of the borrowers' sons. There ean be no question but that this is one οf the elasses of which fall debts within the definition of such as are capable of being regarded as binding upon the joint family property under the dostrine of legal necessity and of family benefit, and indeed, this item is conceded by the appellants as being admissible and ineapable of being seriously disputed.

The second item in the schedule is for a debt of Rs. 2. 00 borrowed from one Shanker Sahay under a document signed by Hari Prased Singh alone. It is stated in this document that the debt is incurred "to meet my necessary expenses" and in the evidence of one Jagat L. Misser, who was in the service of the lender we are told that the debt was incurred to pay the cost of presents on the occasion of the marriages of certain named members of the defendant family. Here again it would seem that, if this story is true, and there seems no reason for doubting it, this was a debt—which cannot well be challenged.

The third item in the schedule is a debt of Rs. 2,0.0. It is swideneed by an asknow. ledgment of indebtedness signed Ramebaran Singb, Maha Prasad Singh and Hari Prasad Singh in favour of one Hima: Ram Marwari. It does not, on its face, state for what purpose the money was borrowed, but in the evidence of one Jagroop Rai who was a Muhurrir in the service of Hari Prasad Singh, it is sworn that the sum was borrowed in order to pay certain expenses which the three signatories incurred on the occasions of certain marriages of their children whose names are given. Here, again, if this is true, and there seems no reasons to doubt the story, this is another of legal necessity and of family benefit.

The fourth debt in the schedule is one for Rs. 0,000. It is evidenced by a rota executed by Ram Charan Singh, Maha Prasad Singh and Hari Prasad Singh in favour of Himat Ram Marwari. The document itself does not say for what purpose the debt was contracted but in the evidence of Jagroop Rai again, we find it stated that the money was borrowed in order to meet the cost of the esremony known as Duiragaman of the wives of the young men and of the young women members of the defendant family who had recently teen married. It has been held in Churaman Sahu v. Gopi Sahu (54) that the cost of the performance of this ceremony is an expense legitimately falling within the estegory of those debts which may be classed as of legal necessity or family benefit and again it is difficult to see how this claim can be successfully opposed.

The fifth item represents Rs. 5,000 borrowed from two persons, named Sri Durga Bhagat and Sri Ram Khelawan Bhagat, and is evidenced by a roka executed by Ram Charan Singh, Maha Prasad Singh and Hari Prasad Singh. It does not state, on the face of the document, for what purpose the money was taken and both of the lenders are dead, nor is there any direct evidence apparently that this cash was taken for purposes of legal necessity or family benefit.

The same may be said with regard to the sixth item in the schedule which represents a sum of Rs. 1,000 borrowed from the same people on the same day by a document signed by Hari Prasad Singh alone.

The seventh item shows a sum of Rr. 2,400 borrowed from two persons, named Sri Ram Lakhan Bhagat and Sri Jiwan Bhagat, the roka is signed by Ram Charan Singh, Maha Prasad Singh and Hari Prasad Singh. Nothing is said again as to the purpose for which this amount was obtained, and so far as the oral evidence goes we only get the facts of the transaction and of its subsequent satisfaction.

The eighth item is again for the sum of Rs. 5,000. This seems to have been a loan by one Debi Prashad Jha and to have been evidenced by a roka signed by Ram Charan Singh, Maha Prasad Singh, Hari Prasad Singh and Biswanath. On the document it is merely stated that Rs. 1,500 were due in connection with a former roka hundi to the lender whilst a further sam of Rs. 3,500 was being borrowed by the borrowers for meeting necessary expenses. There is, however, a certain amount of oral evidence which indicates the purposes for which this money was actually borrewed. In the first place, one witness called Gajadhar Jha who was a rephew of the lender who is now dead and who bad two other uncles named Hira Jha and Santuki Jha who are also both dead and with whom he lived joint in mess and property stated that he used to work as a clerk in his uncle's service, that he was acquainted with the executants of the roku in question, that he recollected this roka for Rs. 5,000 and that his uncle Santuki informed him that of this Rs. 5,000, Rs. 1,500 had been borrowed to pay a previous debt incurred in connection with the marriages of certain named members of the defendant family and that the remaining Rs. 3,500 were borrowed for expensee in connection with the Settlement Survey of the Barcope property. He also gives evidence that these debts were duly re-paid. Another witness named Manna Lal Misser actually wrote out the bond which was signed by the executants in his presence and he definitely states that Rs. 1,500 of the amount were set off against a previous debt incurred under a roka in connection with marriages of certain named members of the defendant family and that Re. 3,500 were taken in order to meet the cost of settlement operations. He was a relative of Santuki Jha. Another deponent Koski Nath Ohow. dbury, who was acquainted with all the parties and who was also an attesting witness to the roka, gives evidence to the same effect. It would, therefore, seem fairly evident that this debt is not one which can be successfully challenged.

The next item in the schedule represente a sum of Re. 7,500. The amount is borrowed from the person Santuki Jba mentioned in connection with the previous transaction and is evidenced by a bond executed by Ram Charan Singh, Maha Prasad Singh, Hari Prasad Singh and Biswanath Singh. The doument itself merely states that the money is borrowed "for meeting our necessities," but the oral evidence seems to show for what purpose the money was obtained. The witness Gajadhar Jha states that he was present when the bond was executed in order to expenses insurred in connection with marriages of certain named members of the defendant family and of their Dwlraga.

therewith. The same statement is also made by the other witness already mentioned named Korki rath Chowdhury. Once more it is difficult to see how, if this story is correct, these transactions can be successfully objected to. The tenth item on the list relates to a sum of Rs. 5,000 borrowed from one Sagar Mull Marwari and evidenced by a roka signed by four defendants, Ram Charan Singh, Maba Prasad Singh, Hari Prasad Singh and Biswanath Singh, document itself merely states that the money is borrowed for meeting our necessities. The oral evidence, which is perhaps of a slender character, as to the reason for which this money was taken, is that of Ballabh Ram who was the Gomastha of the lender's firm and who was present when one, at any rate, of the executants signed the roka. He says that the money was borrowed in order to meet the cost of coltivation to buy bullocks and for the maintenance of the family house. Once more, if this story is sorrect, it would be difficult to maintain successfully that such purposes may not have been either for legal necessity or on assount of family benefit. The 11th item in the eshedule refers to a further debt of Rs. 5,000 evidenced by a roka in favour of one Sri Handi Ram Manda and executed in his favour by Ram Charan Singh, Hari Prasad Singh and Maha Prasad Singh. The document merely states that "the loan is effected in order to meet necessary expenses." In the oral evidence of one Koolida Pershad Manda who was the son of the lender, who at the date of the deposition was an invalid, it is stated that this amount was borrowed from his father for the performance of the Upanayan ceremony of a member of the defendant family and for some other purposes which the witness cannot recollect. At any rate so far as this goes (and the amount of the money, which would naturally be required for the purpose of the investiture of the sacred thread seremony, would depend upon the importance of the family in which the ceremony was taking place) there is no doubt that this transaction cannot be objected to, and it must be resollested that one is here dealing with a family whose income was a sub. stantial one and which in its own way was of very considerable importance.

The 12th item represents a sum of Rs. 5,000 borrowed from two persons named Ram Charan Sahu and Gunu Sahu and is evidenced by a roka signed by Ram Charan Singh, Hari Prasad Singh, Maha Prasad Singh and Biswanath Singh. The document merely states that the sum is borrowed to meet necessary expenses. The only evidence which we appear to have with regard to this loan is not very explicit as both the lenders are dead and the son of Ram Charan Sahu merely states the fact of the loan having taken place and as to its re-payment.

The 13th item relates to a debt of Rs. 1,400 borrowed from two persons named Sri Moti Lal Sahu and Sri Sakhi Lal Sahu and evidenced by a roka signed by Ram Charan Singh, Maha Prasad Singh, Hari Prasad Singh and Biswanath Singh. The document itself merely states that the sum is taken for the purpose of meeting necessary expenses, and there seems to be no evidence relating to the exact purpose for which this sum was borrowed.

The 14th item is for a large amount of Rs. 18,145 11-3 borrowed from one Sakha Ram Marwari and evidenced by a roka signed by Ram Charan Singh, Maha Praead Singh and Hari Praead Singh. document states that the money was borrowed in respect of sum due on account of the price of eilver and gold elath and an amount taken in eash. The son of the lender is a witness in the case. name is Nope Chand Ram Marwari, he is a Barker and dealer in cloth and he states in his evidence that the defendant family used to transact considerable business with him, buying sloth and silver (presumably for ornaments) from his establishment and also borrowing money. His father is now produced most of his books dead. He and papers showing the accounts which he had had with the defendants. The roka in question represents a balance of account as dne between the parties at the date upon which it was entered into. It would seem that some Bs. 11,000 represent the cost of purchases of garments and fabrics supplied in connection with the marriages of certain members of the defendant family, impossible to enter into the individual items of this vary lengthy assount which extended over a considerable period, but I do not see anything in the evidence which would justify one in coming to the conclusion that the purchases made from this gentleman were other than of a character which might be described as properly being either for legal necessity or for family benefit.

The 15th item relates to a sum of Rs. 3,000 borrowad from two persons named Giridhari Lal Marwari and Lakehmi Ram Marwari and is evidenced by a ro'ra signed by Ram Charan Singh, Hari Prased Singh and Maha Frasad Singh. The does. ment merely states that the loan is to meet necessary expenses but the evidence of a witness named Luchi Ram, who is the son of the lender, seems to give some fairly definite information as to the reason why this money was borrowed; the lender himself has been dead for many years but the bond was executed in the deponent's He states that Hari Prasad presense. Singh told him that the money was regaired for purposes of cultivation and for their household. It is difficult to say, without evidence to the contrary, that this debt was not contrasted for either family benefit or even legal necessity.

The last item in the schedule indicates a sum of Rs. 21,469 14 0 and with regard to this, the position is perhaps, somewhat slightly different to that which may obtain in the other items to which I have already referred. It is a loan purporting to be made on the 16th December 1896 in favour of one Babu Anand Ram Marwari and is evidenced by roka signed by Ram Oharan Singh, Maha Prasad Singh and Hari Prasad Singh. It resites that the Rs. 21,469 14 0 is due by the executants on account of principal and interest on that day in respect of a considerable number of previously contracted debts evidenced by rokas of certain dates which are given on the face of the document. It will be observed that the date of this document heing the 16th December 1896 it is only a few days prior in date to the bond upon which action has here been brought and it may be thought that in considering the next point in this care relative to antecedent debt this elese juxtaposition of dates may be of some importance. I am not sure that essentially that is the case. I proceed at once to enquire into some of the component portions of this roka and shall at the moment content myself with saying that it would appear at first sight to be a bond of consolidating character bringing together merely for the cake of convenience into one a number of small debts contracted at prior dates. I do not propose to enter in any great detail upon all the items out of which this sum of Rs. 21,469.140 is made up and will content myself by referring to two:

(1) An account rendered for Rs. 2,623 by one Sukh Ram Marwari for debts on account of cloth, etc., and cash dated the 30th Sawan 1304 which includes certain interest and-

(2) An account rendered due to Surju Ram dated the 30th Assin 1304 for Rs. 5,516 on surrent account for grocer's stores, sloth and sash which includes interest on the running ascount. I see no reason to attempt, even if one had the material, to delve deeply into each petty item of old accounts or rokars such as these. There is ample general evidence to show that the lender did not lend haphezard but with prudent and reasonable enquiry and I see no reason why this i'em should be disallowed. Now, the total of the amounts which I have already dealt with in detail and which were the sebeduled amounts mentioned in the bond itself, aggregate only about the sum of Rs. 1,10,000 and as has been stated before, the amount of fresh money advanced was considerably greater than that, namely Rs. 1,36,000 odd. This surplus is represented, except for a small amount by a variety of small loans incurred, as was the case with those to which I have already referred in detail, for various purposes and contracted by one or sometimes more of the principal members of the controlling adults of the family in question, in addition to this there were also certain legal expenses spanested with the bond, such as for example Rs. 1,750 for the stamp, Re, 370 for registration and Rs. 1,750 for what is called the writing fee, that is to say, for the drawing up of the bond (a sum which to my mind appears to be semswhat excessive but which is, I understand conventionally correct), Speaking very generally with regard to this surplue, although there are a certain number of loans, amounting in the aggregate to a small sum as to the reason for which there is no evidence as to why they were made, it may be said that it purports to be composed of petty borrowing made, as in the case with which I have dealt in detail, to meet household purposes, such as the purchase of eloth for the family, for comestibles and similar commodities; for a certain portion of this borrowing the Subordinate Judge has thought fi', after seeing the witnesses and hearing the evidence, to consider that there should be no decree against the family as such and so far as I am concerned, I am not ready to disagree with the conclusions to which he has come. It will have been observed that, hitherto, I have only dealt in detail with the actual items of debt which are referred to as appertaining to the new advance of capital on the loan arranged by the bond now sued upon and have in no way considered that part of the Rs. 3,50,000 which constituted in effect a renewal of the older (the 4th) bond aggragating in itself the capital and interest then due thereon, and here, before dealing with the other side of this transaction, that is to say, with that part of it which constituted the renewal of the fourth bond of 1801, I should like to venture a few general remarks.

This case is one which exemplifies very fally the difficulties which occur in this country in endeavouring to apply principles of British Jurisprudence to the incidences of the law relating to the Hindu joint family. In my short experience here I have already expressed my view in the case of Mathura Misra v. Raikumar Misra (5) that it is hard to apply to its consideration the exact logical processes of mind upon which the British Jurisprudence is founded and I have already there stated that I have been told that one must not attempt to do so but one cannot help feeling that the position, which partially obtains here in litigious proesedings in connection with the status of the joint Hindu family, is the cesasion for giving rise to much expensive and socially unnequaeary litigation. More than that, it saema to me that, as at present yiewed, the communal aspect of the Hinda joint family is in some respects a serious bar to real progress in the satisfactory Administration of Law HART PRASAD SINGHA U. SOURENDRA MOHAN SINHA.

and Justice-quite apart from the revenual impasse which it seems to produce. In this Court much energy and labour is devoted towards the enquiry, which is very often more or less uncertain or fruitless, as to whether in fast, debts incurred by adult members of a joint Hindu family affecting the joint family property can be later on repudiated by persons such as either minors or children not even born when the debts were contrasted on the ground that they were not binding upon the challengers on account of the fast that they were contrasted for immoral purposes or for reasons disconnected with what is known as legal necessity or family benefit. I omit altogether, for the moment, the conditions in which it is proved that such debts were incurred for improper purposes, as so far as this case is concerned, there is no real suggestion now that the polition possupied was ever of that charas. ter. On the other hand it has been pointed out by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Conneil that when in cases of this character, one finds debts contracted long ago by the heads of the family, it may be difficult and often impossible for the successors of the lender to prove within the close four corners of the doctrines of legal necessity or family benefit the cause why such money was advanced. It is interesting to observe in this connection in this case that the bond now sued upon was dated so long ago as the 21st December 1896. I cannot help thinking that where one finds the principal adult members of a joint family horrowing money without any evidence being shown against such transactions as being of an improper character, it is very difficult for minors at a far later date to dispute them or to allege easually, without positive evidence that those transactions were not designed for the benefit of the family or for some legal necessity. I cannot also belp thinking that to embark upon any very serious enquiry into such circumstances would almost render the task of the Judiciary here practically impossible. It is true that in this Province we have very frequently before us the spectacle of the historical position, which one has observed similarly in other countries many years ago. We see well-to-do gentlemen with what the ordinary person would regard as quite adequate incomes belonging to the Zemindari slass apparently unable to and sometimes careless of whether they can meet their expenses out of their revenues; these gentle nen are sometimes really extravagant and on the other hand sometimes unwilling on assount of the position which they hold to lower their standard of expense of living for fear of not retaining themselves in the high estimation in which they have hitherto been held. The consequence of either of these two conditions is often disastrons as they often resort to borrowing. In this ease now before us there is now no sugges. tion of anything other than that the revenue derived from the defendant's estates did not altogether suffine to support the altique of the dignity of the position which they thought it fit and incumbent on themselves to maintain. For persons situated such as these are and surrounded, no doubt, by considerable difficulties, it seems to me that one must make considerable allowances. and although they may be regarded perhaps improvident, I am not at all prepared to say that under the views which I have indicated, the debts which they entrasted can be regarded under normal eireumstances in law as insapable of recovery by the lender.

The difficulty of understanding the position of the Hindu joint family as it is to be regarded by modern conceptions of ease. law, seems in my respectful opinion to be due to the fact that the trend of resent decisions appears to have been, and perhaps rightly, directed towards the clarifying of the curious legal results due to the somewhat anomalous and archaic conditions created by the legal incidents attached under Hindu Law to the joint family; this attitude appears to be comparatively of recent date and seems to me to be founded largely on legal fictions, which do not, so far as I can see, emanate directly from the Hindu Law but on the other hand it seems probably useful and salutary and I should imagine is still in a very transitional stage. So far as one can judge from the constant questions on the matter which are brought before this Court, there must arise out of, for example the dostrine of antecedent debt, numerous important enquiries which have not as yet been decided, and yet one sannot help thinking that that doctrine is an artificial one and that legislation is the HABI PRASAD SINGUA U. SOURENDRA MOHAN SINGA.

real remedy to place the present unsatisfactory state of affairs upon an intelligible footing. It is practically impossible for the Courts here successfully to grope back into years long past in order to ascertain with regard to debts contracted long before the date of the suit, whether they were for improper purposes or for legal necessity or family benefit. If where the onus is on the plaintiff who lent the money, he or his successor can substantially prove that (the lender) made at the time some sort of reasonable enquiry, that is the utmost in my humble opinion which he or they should be required to prove, indeed as to what this enquiry should be I have no doubt, for if it was necessary for a person approached by another person, a member of a joint Hindu family, for a loan to investigate completely and exhaustively the reason why a loan should be required and whether it could properly be given, all lending transactions of that sategory between the public in this country would almost be for practical purposes at a standstill. When a lender contemplates lending money to a Karta of a joint family, it is probable that according to the present law, he should make some elear enquiry as to the reason for which the loan is being arranged but provided that he is told that reason and that reason seems to him a propor one, it does not appear to me that it is necessary for him to make any further enquiry. It ossurs to me to be indeed absord that it should be entemplated that a lender should examine entirely the circumstances of the borrower or to do more than be assured by him that the money is required for the legal nesessity or the family benefit of the family which the borrower represents. For these reasons, therefore, I consider that the . view which the Subordinate Judge expressed with regard to the new money advanced in connection with the bond sued upon is substantially correct, apart always from the question of the amount of interest which ean be elaimed under the limitations imposed by the Sonthal Parganas Regulation, I have dealt so far with the question of, what I call, the fresh capital which was advanced under the bond sued upon but, I have still now to deal with that portion which constituted the basis of the renewal of the old bond of the 29th September 1891. Now, with regard to this, of sourse, we have the application of the dostrine of antecedent debt, and it is necessary, therefore, that one must question from that regard the point. [See Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Girja Korr (7), Khalilul Rahman v. Gobind Pershad (8), Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4), Mathura Misra v. Rajkumar Misra (5)]. concerned, as the principle is High Court in the Patna Misra v. Rajkumar Misra (5) has desided that where the Karta of a family has, hypothecating the family property, entered into an obligation which was based upon a previous similar obligation dissonnected with it in fact and in time, the dostrine of antecedent debt applies, and, of course, I do not recede from that judgment to which I was a party. This may be right or wrong, but I believe it is in consonance with the present ides of the development of the antecedent debt theory, and, incidentally, is an instance of encroachment on the ancient legal incidence attaching themselves to the joint Hindu family some of which are so opposed to modern thought. It will be observed here that in the case of this fifth bond the fresh eapital borrowed amounted to Bs. 1,36,142 the balance, which consisting both of capital and asserted interest constituted a renewal of the fourth bond dated the 29th September 18 11 being Rs. 2,13,858. This fourth bond was entered into by Ram Charan Singh for himself and for Rup Narayan Singh his minor son by Hari Prasad Singh for himself and for Lakhi Prasad Singh and Bishun Prasad Singh, his minor sons, by Biswanath Singh, by Maha Prasad Singh for himself and for Sashi Bhusan Singh his minor son and by Gajadhar Singh. So far, therefore, as can be seen it would appear to be binding in every manner possible, and if this Court by its Eull Bensh decision Mathura Misra v. Bankumar Misra (5) is correct the obligation incurred in the fourth bond is binding.

A carious question has been raised in connection with the position which, it is suggested, might obtain in certain circumstances which might be applicable both in connection with some of the debts which were paid off by the fresh capital which was borrowed under the fifth bond in connection with some of the debts which similarly were paid off under the fourth bond, the question relates to how far the doctrine of antecedent debt may properly be extended and it arises in this way. The doctrine of antecedent debt is supposed to be founded upon Hindu Law [see Mayre's Hindu Law and Usage, 8th Edition, page 395, Gharpure's Mitakabars, page 86 (Yajnavalkys, verse 55) Tagore's Dayabbaga and \ivada Chintamani, pages 34 and 35. Colebrook's Mitakabars, page 221].

On the other hand it has been equally strenuously contended before us that the development of this dostrine has now gone past the mere application of the ancient texts and is tased at present upon much case law decision. It is common ground, however, that where a mertgage of family property is executed by a father to pay off a proper price debt it is birding upon his ecn. But what is the position in the event of all the adult members of a joint family joining in entering into a mertgage for a like purpose? Are all the sons of all the adults liable and is the whole of the family property mortgaged by all those adult members of the family liable in the same way as the sons of a father would be liable in respect of a family properly for such a debt so incurred by their father. I cannot see that any other answer can be given save in the affirmative. But the matter does not rest there. It has already been observed that there were at least four adult members of this joint family and that the fresh eapital was borrowed by them under the fifth bord for the purpose of paying off previously incurred debts, which had been incurred in some cases, under documents excented by all four adults, in other cases only by three of them and in other instances by only one. The question arises as to what is the position with regard to the application of the doetrine of antecedent debt to the family property with respect to, let us 185, for example, a debt previously incorred by a single one of these four adult members. It is true that it may perhaps be taken that although the document, which constitutes the evidence of such debt, is only executed by one of the four adults, no doubt the transaction was at the time impliedly acquiesced in by the other three adult members of the family and expressly ratified by the fact that it is aggregated into the lump sum, which finally forms the principal part of the freeh capital borrowed under the fifth bond for the purpose of paying off all these antecedent dobts however ocrtracied, and in that way it might perhaps be argued that, provided it is clear that at least implied or expressed acquiescence was really present, it would not matter in law that the debt purported to bave been incurred by one or for that matter by three of the four adult members of the family. I think this raises a question of no little difficulty and to some extent it is difficult to avoid being led into a confusion of mind between the incidences of the doctrine of antecedent debt and the incidences which are capable of applica. tion in the same where debts incurred by representative members of a joint family are for the purpose of legal necessity or family benefit. If the dostrine of antecedent debt, as it now stands, has to be based upon the Hindu Law alone, I doubt if in cases such as those which I have quoted above, it would be possible to apply it. But if, on the other hand the dostrine may be regarded as in course of development under the moulding of judicial decisions, I am inclined to think that the dcetrice is capable of extension to cover instances of the character which I have indicated. The sixth point is as to whether the personal decree should not be regarded as barred by Order IJ, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code in view of the previous suit. On this question I have had the advantage of seeing my Lord the Chief Justice's judgment and with his conclusions I entirely agree. It may be now advantageous here to summarise the conclusions to which I have come. They are as follows :-

(2). I do not consider that the plaintiffs can recover more interest than the amount equivalent to the total fresh capital actually advanced by the plaintiffs, and that from this cum must be deducted that interest which has already been paid. It is fortunate that here it is common ground that on the calculation of interest on this basis, the amount due is not less than the amount which would thus be awarded and the calculation of this sum is merely a matter of simple arithmetic.

(3) I bow to the opinion held by this Court that the ordinary legal interest cannot run on the decretal amount if such accruer increases the amount of interest to a sum greater than the principal ad-

THE TATA INDUSTRIAL BANK, LTD , In re.

(4) I am not prepared to disigree with the views expressed by the Subordinate Judge as to the amounts of the debt which he considers to have been incurred on account of legal necessity or family benefit or with regard to that amount for which he has given a personal decree.

(5) I do not consider that the personal desree is in any way barred by the previous proceeding.

(6) I do not think that the suit is barred in any way by limitation.

(7) I think that the fourth bond is an antecedent debt upon which that part of the fifth bond which relates to it can be entirely supported subject to the question of interest.

(8) In all other respects I agree with the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice.

JUDGMENT.

M.C.ROO, C. J.—This is a reference by the Chief Revenue Authority, Bombay, under section 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act, with regard to the interpretation of section 9 of the Act.

The Tata Industrial Bank was assessed by the Collector of Income Tax for the year 1920-21 on profits amounting to nearly thir. teen lace. I omit all mention of super tax as unnecessary. On appeal to the Commissioner a slight reduction was made, but before both authorities an important question was raised by the Bank since they elaimed to deduct from the taxable profits a sum of Rs. 2,98,000 said to be the amount of depresiation on war bonds and securities belonging to the Bank, arrived at by comparing the market rates with the valuations in the Bocks of the Bank. This deduction was not allowed on the ground that the only allowances and deductions to be made from the gross income in order to arrive at real assessable profits were those mentioned in sub section 2 of section 9.

The following questions were referred to the High Court for decision :-

(1) Whether on a true construction of the Indian Income Tax Act of 1918 and in particular section 9, the only allowances and deductions to be made from the gross income in order to arrive at real assessable profits are those mentioned in sub-section 2 of section 9 and whether the said section 9 prohibits any allowances or deductions other than those specifically mentioned therein.

(2) Whether on a true construction of the said Act and in particular section 9, the assessing officer is not entitled in his disertion to allow a deduction which is proper and necessary to be made in addition to those specifically enumerated in sub section 2 in order to assertain the real assessable profits.

(4) Whether the deduction of Rs. 2,98,00 (being the amount of depreciation on war bonds and securities) cut of the great earnings of the assesses is a deduction proper and necessary to be made in order to ascertain the real assessable profits under the said Act, and,

(4) Whether the Act attaches to the expression 'profits' a meaning different from what is known as commercial profits.

Section 5 of the Act includes among the classes of income which shall be chargeable to Income Tax income derived from business."

Under section 9 (1) the tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head 'Income derived from business' in respect of the profits of any business carried on by him.

Under section 9 (2) such profits shall be computed after making the following allowacces in respect of sums paid or in the case of depresiation debited.

Items I to V, VIII and IX are items of actual expenditure, Item VII deals with the case of machinery sold at a less price than the cost less depreciation, Item VI deals with the depreciation of machinery, plant and buildings,

It would appear, therefore, that with regard to assets owned by the assesses other than machinery, plant and buildings, a debit for depreciation is not allowed.

The difficulty in the case arises from the fact that various meanings can be ascribed to the word 'profits'.

The petitioners have relied on the definition of 'profits' as laid down in Spanish Prospecting Company Limited, In re (1). The elaimants agreed to serve the Company at a fixed salary which they were not to be entitled to draw except cut of profits (if any) arising from the business of the Company. The Company went into voluntary liquida. tion. After all the creditors except the elaimants were paid and all the capital subseribed was paid to the share holders, there remained a surplus in the hands of the liquidators which the elaimants contended should be treated as profits within the terms of their agreement. Two ecntributories took out a summens asking for a declaration that the claimants were not entitled to prove in respect of the surplus on the ground that profits should be restricted to profits realized by the Company on a going scneern.

"The word 'profits' bar, in my opinion, a well defined legal meaning, and this meaning coincides with the fundamental conception of profits in general parlance, although in mercantile phraseology the word may at times bear meanings indicated by the special context which deviate in some respects from this fundamental signification. implies a comparison between the state of a business at two specific dates usually separated by an interval of a year. The fundamental meaning is the amount of gain made by the business during the year. This can only be ascertained by a comparison of the assets of the business at the two dates. For practical purposes these assets in calculating profits must be valued and not merely enumerated ... A depreciation in value, whether from physical or commercial causes, which affects their realizable value is in truth a business lose ... But though there is a wide field for variation of practice in these estimations of profits in the domestic documents cf a firm or a company, this liberty ceases at ones when the rights of third persons intervene. For instance, the revenue has a right to a certain percentage of the profits of a company by way of income tax. The setual profit and loss accounts of the company do not in any way bind the Crown in arriving at the tax to be paid."

No doubt in the balance sheet of a business the excess of assets over liabilities or vice versa is represented by a credit or debit to the profit and loss account, so as to make the totals even. There is not much difficulty in calculating the liabilities, the value of the balance sheet depends on the correct valuation of the assets. It is the reekless or oversanguine valuation of assets which is the presureor of rain. Now if it had been intended by the Act that the profits for any particular year should be calculated by the gain in the excess of assets over liabilities during that period nothing would have been easier than to give expression to that intention. But, on the one hand, difficulties would arise in the case of every assessment in assertaining that the assessee had made a fair valuation of his assets, while, on the other, the assesses would be taxed on every appreciation in the market value of his assets, and that is certainly not the object of an Income Tax Act. It must be remembered that the word 'profit' is only used THE TATA INDUSTRIAL BANK, LTD., In re.

for explaining the method by which taxable income is to be computed. I am, therefore clearly of opinion that we are not concerned with the legal definition of profits as laid down by Fletcher Moulton, L. J. in the case above cited.

As the learned Lord Justice points out, a firm or a company has a wide field for variation in practice in its estimation of its profits but that liberty ceases when the rights of a third party intervene. And in the case of income tax the Legislature prescribes the manner in which the taxable amount is to be saleulated. The income of a business may be defined as the gross sarnings either actually received or properly considered as if they had been received, after deducting all ordinary expenses incurred in the earning. These expenses must come under one of the Items I to V, VIII and IX of section 9 (2). When the questions arise how the income is to be disposed of, the distinetion between income and profits as legally defined above will be clearly seen, and profits may be fairly accurately described as that amount which can be taken out of the business for dividends or private expenses without impairing its efficiency. Of course out of that amount something may still be left in the business by way of reserve but it is not disputed that any sum eredited to reserve is liable to be taxed. It may also be as well to note that we are not concerned with the case of a business which deals in stocks and chares, looking solely for its income to the gains made by buying and selling, for it seems to be admitted that then an. ticipated losses may be deducted. We have been referred to the corresponding provisions of the English Income Tax Act but it would appear that the Indian Legislature has deliberately refrained from adopting those provisions, and instead of detailing allowances which cannot be deducted mentions specifically those which can. At the same time no English case has been eited to us in which a deduction for depreciation such as is now claimed has been allowed. In the rules applicable to eases I and II of Sebedule D of the Income Tax Act, 8 & 9 Geo. V, e. 5, the only rule which deals with depreciation is rule 6 in which a deduction for depreciation of mashinery and plant can be allowed from the profite or gain of a trade.

Apart from that, the only deductions which would be allowed if not prohibited would be expenses incurred solely for the purpose of earning the profits, and any other debits for depreciation would not come within this estegory. It seems to me, therefore, that in construing sections 5 and 9 of the Act, chargeable income is synonymous with profits and section 9 (2) prescribes how those profits are to be ascertained. From the gross income only certain debits for depreciation are to be allowed and this debit asked for by the Bank not being mentioned therein cannot be allowed.

I think this was the obvious intention of the Legislature, since, while depreciation of machinery, plant and buildings can easily be calculated as provided in the Act, it would be a very different matter to have to enter into such calculations with regard to assets other than these. But this much is clear that if the profits of a business are to be calculated ascording to the legal definition of profits, that method of calculation must be continued from year to year, and an assessee would not be allowed to write down his assets in a year when market values had declined without writing them up when values had increased.

I would answer the questions propounded in the reference as follows:—

- 1. Profits in section 9 of the Act means chargeable income and must be computed from the gross income after allowing for the sums paid and debited as detailed in subsection (2).
- 2. The assessing officer is not entitled to allow any deduction for sums paid or debited other than those properly paid and debited as detailed in sub-section (2).
 - 3. No.
- 4. 'Profits' in the Act means chargeable income.

The Bank will have to pay the costs of the reference.

SHAH, J.—On this reference the position appears to me to be simple and clear, though on account of the way in which the questions have been formulated it has become nonecessarily difficult. On the interpretation of section 9 it seems to me to be clear that the tax under the head "Income derived from business" is payable in respect of the profits of the business carried on by the assesses. The meaning of the word profits' is not defined: but I agree with the learned Chief Justice on this point in holding that it is the gross income of the business. Even then it may be open to the assessing authority to take into consideration the nature of the business and the losser, if any, in determining the profits or the gross income of the business. The section does not make any provision as to how the profits are to be determined. But it seems to me that where a deduction is proper and necessary to be made in order to assertain the 'profits' or gross income of any business, the assessing authority may allow it in his discretion.

The section, however, makes prevision for making allowances in respect of certain sums paid or in the case of depreciation debited by the Company or the individual concerned. They are stated in section 9, sub-section (2) and it is clear that those are the only allowances which the party eould claim as of right. The Collector is not bound to make any other allowences in favour of the party, nor is the party entitled thereto as of right. In the present case the depreciation claimed by the Compay is not ecvered by any clause of section 9 (2) and cannot be allowed as such. This poeition is not seriously contested before us on behalf of the Company. But it is urged that as an item of loss it is open to the Collector to allow it in calculating the profits or the gross income of the business during the year in question. As stated in the letter of reference, the attitude taken up by the Company before the Revenue Authorities was to claim only depreciation as such without agreeing to take into account appreciation, if any. As regards this point, the position for the Crown has been very fairly and in my opinion scrreetly stated by the Chief Revenue Authority in paragraph 12 of the reference. This reference must, therefore, be dealt with on the footing that the deduction claimed by the Company is in respect of depreciation as such and not as an item of less or gain in the business during the year. This will prejudice neither the right of the Company to elaim, for the power of the Revenue Arthorities to make, due allowance for any loss or gain in virtue or appreciation of the of depreciation various scenrities in the course of and as part of the business in determin ng the amount of the profits or gross income of that business, if the facts essential for making such allowance are established. It is not easy, in my opinion, to formulate categorical replies to the questions some of which are general. Treating the reference, however, as limited to the claim made before the Revenue Authorities for depreciation as such, I concur in the answers proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice to the questions raised in this reference as also in the order as to costs.

The Bank's Attorney moved the High Court on the 4th November 1921, for an order fixing up the scale of costs.

Macagon, C. J.—Following our decision in Aurangabad Mills Ltd., In re (2) the costs will be taxed as on the Original Side. But in order to avoid any question being raised in future whether the Court has jurisdiction in references of this nature to direct costs to be taxed on the Original Side scale, it will be advisable to consider whether a rule should be framed under the Bombay Pleaders Act XVIII of 1927.

Answer accordingly.

It is the duty of a Court to avoid such a construction of a decree as may in future result in multiplicity of suits between the parties in respect of a matter which has been finally settled. [p. 985, col 1.]

A talugar executed a Will, under which he devised his estate to his nephew, and by the same Will he granted a maintenance allowance of Rs. 500 per mensem to his wife. By a subsequent codicil he granted another sum of Rs. 500 per mensem to his wife. The lady later on brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge to enforce her right to the annuities against the legatee. She not only claimed the arrears of maintenance but also asked for relief as to her right for the same in future and paid Courtfees both under clause (ii and clause (ii) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act. The Subordinate Judge held that she was entitled to an allowance of Rs. 500 per mensem, under the Will and that she was entitled to nothing under the codicil appeal, the Judicial Commissioner's Court decreed her claim "for a declaration that she is entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 1,000 per mensem out of which half will be recoverable from the taluqdari and the other half from the non-taluqdari property, if any." On a further appeal, their Lordships of the Privy Council upheld this decree and observed as follows: - "The respondent's Counsel expressed a fear that the declaration granted was insufficient It does not so seem to their Lordships. It is a corollary of the declaration granted that any income which has since the death been received from the nontaluqdari estate will be liable as well as the future income to pay the extra 500 rupees, including arrears, from the death up to the date of the declaration : "

Held, that the decree was not merely declaratory of the lady's right to maintenance but that it empowered her to recover that maintenance from the taluqdari and non-taluqdari properties to the extent to which they were respectively liable. [p. 985, col.].]

In transmitting an order of His Majesty in Council to the Court below for execution under Order XLV, rule 15, Civil Procedure Code, a High Court is perfectly competent to give directions to the lower Court for the payment of the money only in the event of a sufficient security being filed by the decree-holder. JUDGMENT. -Thakur Rajindra Babadur Singh was the last holder of the Mahewa taluga, in the District of Kheri. He died on the 18th Ostober 1912. By his Will of the 14th June 1907 he devised the estate to his nephew, Thekor Jai Indra Bahadur Singh, and by the same Will be granted a maintenance allowance of Rs. 500 per mensem to his wife, Rani Bijai Raj Kcer. By a codicil of the 4th October 1912 he granted another sum of Rs. 500 per mensem to Rani Bijai Raj Koer. Rani Bijai Raj Koer brought a sait in July 1913 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rheri to enforce ber right to the annuities stated above against Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh. In her plaint the lady stated that she had received a certain amount of money from Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh in payment of the maintenance due to her. The relief which she asked for was that the "Court might be pleased to pass a decree for Rs. 5,479 14 0 with interest at six per cept. per annum until payment from the date of suit, and the costs of the suit and that the plaintiff might be declared entitled to an allowance at the increased rate set out in the condicil of the 4th of Ostober 1912, that is, to Rs. 500 a month more than was set out in the Will of the 4th June 1907." Soon after the institution of the suit just mentioned, Thakur Jai Indra Bahador Singh's estate was taken under the superintendence of the Court of Wards and the Deputy Commissioner of Kheri was consequently substituted as a party to the suit.

It would be seen from what has gone before that the Rani not only claimed the arrears of maintenance but also asked for relief as to her right for the same in future. She accordingly paid Court fees both under clause (i) and clause (ii) of section 7 of the Court Fass Ast (Ast VII of 1870). learned Subordinate Judge held that the Rani was entitled to an allowance of Rs. 500 per mensem under the Will and that she was entitled to nothing under the codicil. The Rani appealed to this Court. Her appeal was successful. At the end of its judg. ment this Court ordered as follows: -"The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the plaintiff's elaim decreed for a declaration that she is entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 1,000 per month out of which half will be recoverable from the talqudari and the other half from the non talugiari property, if any." The defendant, that is, the Deputy BIJAI RAJ KORR C. THARUR JAI INDRA BAHADUR SINGH, Commissioner of Kheri was dissatisfied with the decree of this Court and an appeal was preferred by him against that drecree to His Majesty in Council. That appeal was dismissed and the decree of this Court confirmed.

Rani Bijai Raj Koer, the decree holder, then applied to this Court under Order XLV. rule 15, of the Code of Civil Procedure and this Court transmitted the order of His Majesty in Council to the Subordinate Judge of Kheri for execution. In spite of her great efforts the lady succeeded in recovering only about Rs. 1,200 in execution of her decree in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kheri. Afterwards she applied under section 39 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the transfer of her decree to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow. The decree holder presented a fresh application for execution on the 12th of March 1919 to the Court of the Second Additional District Judge of Lucknow, to whose file the case had been transferred for disposal. The prayer in the application was that under Order XXI, rule 52, of the Oode of Civil Procedure a prohibitory order be issued to the Registrar of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Oudb, and Rs. 20,994 together with future interest, whatever it might be, be made payable. It may be stated that this sum of money was held by the Registrar of this Court as belonging to the judgment debtor, being the profits of nortolugdari property of which he had become the owner by virtue of a decree of the Privy The learned Additional District Counsil. Judge issued the order prayed for on the 12th March 1919 but unfortunately this was done without notice to the judgment-debtor. On the 14th March 1:19 the decree holder moved this Ocurt by a petition of that date for an order for the payment of the money attached under the prohibitory order mentioned before. Notice of this application was issued to the judgment debtor and at the hearing of it his Counsel, Mr. St. George Jackson, appeared before the Court. This Court disposed of the application by its order dated the 25th July 1919 which we set out here in extenso.

"It is not disputed that Rajindra Bahadur Singh became entitled to a half share in the 31 villages. The profits, out of which a half share has been attached, are the profits of those 31 villages, from the 11th November 1910, when the Receiver got possession up to the 18th October 1912, the date on which Rajindra Bahadur Siugh died. There appears to be a certain amount of dispute as to the manner in which the legacies made by Rajindra Bahadur Singh should be administered. One of the legatees is Jai Indra Bahadur Singh, the judgment debtor, whose interest has been attached in this case. The money attached cannot, however, be paid to the attaching creditor because other annuitants and legatees are also concerned in the administration of the estate, left by Rajindra Bahadur Singh.

"Mr. John Jackson, who appears for the attaching creditor, states that his client will furnish security for the refund of the money, if it is paid to her, in the event of the title of the judgment debtor, whose interest has been attached, being hereafter found defective. Mr. St. George Jackson, who appears for the judgment debtor, states that he has no objection to the money attached being paid over to the attaching creditor, if sufficient security is furnished as above provided.

"Let the attaching creditor be allowed six weeks' time for filing security. In case the security is furnished, the amount attached will be sent over to the Court making the attachment. If it is not furnished, both the applications will stand dismissed. The parties will in the circumstances, bear their own some of this proceeding."

On the 5th August 1919 the judgment. debtor lodged objections to the execution of the decree in the Court of the Second Additional District Judge. The ground upon which the application for execution was eventually thrown out by the learned Judge was not taken in the petition of objection dated the 5th August 1919 but was urged at the bearing. The objection was that the decree, which Rani Bijai Raj Koer was seeking to execute, was merely declaratory and not capable of execution. The learned Judge accepted the objection and dismissed the application for execution except as regards a sum of Rs. 2,932 10 10 recoverable as arrears of maintenance under the decree in question. The decres-holder has preferred this appeal against that order.

We are of opinion that the appeal must prevail. The attitude which the judgmentBIJAI BAJ KORR U. THAKUB JAI INDRA BAHADUR SINGH.

debtor has taken in resisting the execution of the decree is manifestly unjust. It is our clear duty to avoid such a construction of the decree in question which would bereafter result in multiplicity of suits between the parties in respect of a matter which has been finally settled by His Majesty in Council. We think that the decree is not merely deslaratory of the plaintiff's right to the maintenance but that it empowers her to recover that maintenance from taluqdari and non taluqdari properties to the extent to which they are respectively liable. A copy of the printed case of the respondent in that appeal before their Lordships of the Privy Conneil has been placed before us by the learned Ocunsel for the appellant. Amongst the reasons stated therein for the dismissal of the appeal, one was as follows :- "Because the decree as drawn up in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner ought to be amended as it might raise difficulties so as to prevent the respondent from exercising her right to recover in execution of arrears of maintenance improperly withheld." This matter seems to have been considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council at the end of their judgment. They said :- "The respondent's Counsel expressed a fear that the declaration granted was insufficient. It does not so seem to their Lordebipe. It is a sorollary of the deslaration granted that any income which has since the death been received from the non-talugdari estate will be liable, as well as the future income, to pay the extra Rs. 500 including arrears, from the death up to the date of the declaration," Deputy Commissioner of Kheri v. Bijai Ras Koer (1).

The mere fact that the order passed by His Majesty in Council confirms the declaration granted by this Court does not make the order in any sense unexecutable. In the case of Barlow v. Orde (2), Lord Westbury, in addressing the Counsel for the petitioners in that case, observed as follows:—"Your elient will take care to understand, and it must be generally understood, that their Lordships do not recognise the existence of any doubt or difficulty in Decrees relating to maintenance have frequently been subjected to an objection similar to the one urged in this case. In this connection we may refer to a decision of the High Court at Calentta in the case of Ashutosh Banner, ee v. Lukhimeni Debya (3). We may add respectfully that we entirely agree with the view taken by the Full Bench in that ease as regards the construction of such decrees. Our attention was drawn to a decision of a Bench of this Court in the sase of Kashi Bam v. Chaudhrain Sahib-unnisea (4). The ratio decidendi of that case, as wellas of many other cases considered in that judgment, was that no date had been fixed in the decree from which the maintenance would become due. In the case before us there is no such difficulty. The date is not only well-ascertained on the facts of the care but it is distinctly mentioned in the order of His Majesty in Council, as being the date of the testator's death.

But there is another ground upon which we think this appeal must succeed. We have already quoted in full the order of a Bench of this Court dated the 25th July 1919. The Counsel, who appeared for the judgment-debtor, distinctly gave his consent to the money being paid over to the decree-holder if sufficient security was furnished by her. It is admitted that the security which this Court ordered to be furnished has been filed and accepted as sufficient by the that which has embarrassed the Court below, namely, that a declaration is not equivalent to an order. It is the duty of an Appellate Court frequently, and all that it can do, to make a declaration, and then the form in which that declaration is conceived, and the words in which the order is framed, amount to a direction to the Court below to clothe that declaration in the proper form of a mandatory order, and to give effect to the mandatory order so expressed." The desree of this Court, the necessary portion of which we have quoted before, not only granted a declaration as to the right of the plaintiff but it further laid down the mandate that "balf will be recoverable from the taluquari and the other half from the non-taluedari property."

We do not think that it is now Court. open to the respondent to withdraw that consent. It was asted upon by the desreeholder inasmuch as she filed the security in pursuance thereof as noted above. order of this Court, therefore, is in our opinion binding on the respondent We may refer in this connection to the following decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council, Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (5), Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (6) and Beni Ram v. Nanhu Mal (7).

The learned Pleader for the respondargued that the order of the 25th July 19,9 was passed by this Court in its administrative capacity and that it had no jurisdiction to pass that order if it were held to be of a judicial character. are not prepared to accept this contention. We do not think that by transmitting the order of His Majesty in Council to the Court below for execution under Orler XLV, rule 15, of the Code of Civil Procedure this Court divested itself of the power of giving directions to the Court below in regard to the execution of the decree. Sub-rule (2) of rule 15 of that order vests such a jurisdiction in this Court and it "shall (upon the application of either party) give such directions as may be required for the execution of the came; and the Court to which the said order is so transmitted shall execute it accordingly." We may quote another remark of Lord Westbury from the ease of Barlow v. Orce (2) :- "Therefore, it was the duty of the parties to have brought the decree of Her Majesty in Council to the knowledge of that Court, and asked that Court to enforce and execute the decree, and it would be the duty of the Court to give directions for that purpose. Of course, it has no primary power of doing it; but it is to be enforced and executed under the directions of the Court by the Judge or officer by whom the suit was originally tried." This Court war, therefore, perfectly competent to give directions to the lower Court for the payment of the money only in the event of a suffisient security being filed by the decree holder. We have already pointed out that this order was passed with the consent of the judgment. debtor. In a recent decision of the Privy Council in the ease of Ramachandra Deo Garu v. Chaitana Sahu (8) Lord Buskmaster stated the effect of an order passed by consent as being conclusive between the parties. We are confident that if the order dated the 25th July 1919 had been brought to the notice of the learned Additional District Judge he would have given the same effect to it as we have done.

We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the order of the learned Additional District Judge and, as the ease was disposed of on a preliminary point, we send it bask to him for disposal assording to law. The appellant will be entitled to her costs in both the Courts.

Hindu Law-Widow-Partition among family-Widow given full share of husband-Intention-Husband's heirs entitled to such property after widow's death-Evidence-Statement by deceased person provable against persons claiming through him.

Where after the death of a brother the remaining brothers partition the joint family property and give to the widow of the deceased brother the full share of their deceased brother in the immoveable as well as in the moveable property and in the assets of the joint family business, and the share is much more than what is needed for her maintenance, it may be assumed that the intention of the brothers was to regard the widow as the representative of the late husband and in such a case the share thus allotted to the widow descends after her death to her husband's heirs. JHABBU LAL U. JWALL PRASAD.

First appeal from a decree of the Sabordinate Judge, Shabi happar, dated the 11th May 1918.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Harnanian Frisil and N. P. Asthani, for the Respondents.

JUDGME ! I. - The plaintiffs in this suit as originally filed were Sakh Lal, son of Shib Charan Lal, together with Jhabba Lal and Daulat Ram, sons of Kalla Mal, an own brother of Sakh Lal. The fact that Sakh Lal has since died and is now represented in this appeal by his sons does not affect any of the questions before us for determination. principal defendant, Jwala Prasad, is the daughter's son of Lalji Mal, brother of Shib Charan Lal. For cortain reasons which are not material in view of the desision we have come to in the case as a whole, there were joined with him as defendants his father Janki Prasad and his wife Musamnat Dropadi. In dealing with the appeal before us we propose to treat Jwala Prasad as the principal and the only substantial defendant in the case. It is ad. mitted that Shib Charan Lal and Lalji Mal had two other brothers named Manna Lal and Bindrabao. Of these four brothers Lulji Mal died first, in or about the year 1879 A. D. Shib Oharan died in 1889, Bindraban in 1909. Musammat Genda, widow of Lalji Mal and grandmother of the principal defendant died on the 9th of May 1913. Manna Lal survived her, but had died before the institution of the present suit. The plaint as drafted ean only be described, in view of the fasts disclosed by the evidener, as a thoroughly disingenuous dosument. It alleges that Lulji Mal died at a time when he and his three brothers still formed a joint undivided family and it care. fully avoids admitting that separate possession or enjoyment in respect of any portion of the joint family estate was ever conferred upon his widow Musammat Gonda. There is an admission that this lady's name was resorded as the owner of a rateable share in some of the Z mindari property belonging to the joint family. This is said to have been done "for consolation" only, and there is an express plea that Musannat Genda never enjoyed astail possession over the landed property standing in her name. With reference to cartain other items of property, which admi tails d I not form part of the joint family estate at the time of Lalji Mal's death, there are allegations to the effect that they had been acquired with the income from ancestral property but fistitiously in the names of certain of the defendants. The plaintiff goes on to state that after Musammas Genda's death, the defendants by setting up false and unfounded elaims have dispossessed the plaintiffs in respect of some of the items of property specified at the foot of the plaint and bave denied their title in respect of other items. The suit, therefore, is for recovery of possession in respect of shares in a number of items of property and a declaration of title in respect of the plaintiffs' shares in certain other items. The principal defence was undoubtedly that there had been a separation in the family prior to the death of Lulji Mai, that Musam. mat Ganda had succeeded to Lulji Mal's estate as a Hindu widow and that the principal defendant Jwala Prased was the heir to that estate under the Hinda Law after the death of his mother and of his grandmother. There can be no question, however, that the written statement of this defendant did also set up a certain alternative line of defence. It admitted that the death of Lalji Mal had taken place in the year 1879, whereas a formal and effective partition of the joint family property only took place five years later, that is to say, in Inasmuch, however, as Musummat Ganda was, according to the defendant, assigned a th share in all the property divided at the partition of 1884, and was assigned this share as the representative of Lalji Mal, it was contended that, if she did not in fact take this property in the ordinary way as the widow of a separated Hindu, then she must be taken to have received it at the partition with full proprietary rights and it was pleaded that before ber death she had executed a Will in favour of the principal defendant. In the closing paragraph of the written etatement the plea was very distinctly taken that, in any possible event, the defend. ant Jwala Prasad, as the representative (that is to say, as the lawful heir and successor) either of Lilji Mal or of Musammit Ganda, had a better claim than any of the plaintiff; to that portion of the property in sait which had formed part of the original joint property of the family and had been assigned to Musammat Ganda at the partition of 1884. With regard to other items of property the defendants contended that they JEABBU LAL U. JWALA PRASAD.

represented acquisitions made by Musammat Genda out of the surplus profits of the property in her hands, that they had never accredited to the estate of Lalji Mal in the hands of his widow, that she had retained full disposing power in respect of the same and that she had disposed of them in favour of the defendante. There were also certain pleas challenging the right of the plaintiffs to sue for a mere declaration in respect of some items of property. The suit was tried out in the Court below upon issues very carefully framed which seem fairly to cover the whole ground of the controversy between the parties. The second issue was in the following terms :-

Which of the disputed properties existed in Lalji Mal's time and what interest did Musammot Genda acquire in it?

We have laid some stress upon the pleadings and the frame of the issues, because it has been suggested to us that the argument principally relied upon before us on behalf of the defendante-respondents sets up on their behalf a case not taken in the Court below, or raises some issue, not tried by that Court. We think it will be sufficiently clear when we come to deal with the point that this is not the case, in view of what has been stated above, regarding the pleadings and the second issue in the case. The learned Subordinate Judge found that Lalji Mal died whilst still in a state of jointness with his three brothers, but that there was a partition, accompanied by a complete division of the joint femily property in the year 1884, five years after the death of Lalji Mal. At this partition certain property, including some of the landed property in suit, was banded over to Musammat Genda. It remained in her possession from that date until her death in She made savings out of the income of this property and by means of these savings acquired some of the other properties in suit. She seems also to have invested money in constructing an indigo factory which was also one of the properties elaimed by the plaintiffs. In respect of those items of property set forth at the foot of the plaint which had originally belonged to Lalji Mal and his three brothers jointly, and had been dealt with at the partition of 1884, the learned Subordinate Judge found that a share in these properties was given to Musammat. Genda as a provision for maintenance and that upon her death these properties would go, neither to her own heirs nor to the heirs of her husband, but, as he puts it, to "the estate from which" the property had been taken. Upon this finding he has decreed the plaintiff's claim for a certain rateable share in each of those items of property which he has put in this case. Their suit has been dismissed in respect of other properties acquired by Musammat Ganda out of her savings, on the ground that these acquisitions had never been amalgamated with the enrous of the property obtained by her under the partition, that they were acquisitions of her own over which she had full disposing power and that the defendants were lawfully in possession of the same. There has also been a finding adverse to the plaintiffs on the question of their right to a mere desigration in respect of one item of The suit having been partly property. desreed and partly dismissed, the plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and the defendants have filed cross-objections. The memorandum of appeal raises one or two questions of detail regarding particular items of property. It contests the finding of the Court below with regard to Musammat Genda's acquisitions out of the income of the property in her hands and it shallenges the finding of the lower Court as to the extent of the share to which the plaintiffs were entitled. The defendants have filed a petition of erossobjections raising more than one point, but principally contending that the suit ought to have been altogether dismissed. It was admitted in argument that the defendants could not seriously press the contention that Lalji Mal had separated from his brothers during his life time. We must, therefore, proceed with the case on the assumption that the Court below rightly found that Lalji Mal died in a state of jointness with his three brothers. Five years later we find these three brothers engaged in effecting a complete partition of the joint family property in their hands. There was moveable as well as immoveable property concerned. Four lists were drawn up and one of these liste, admittedly specifying property amounting to a full one-fourth share of the whole, was headed "share of Lalji Mal," and the properties therein specified were made over to Musammat Gunda. There is not the slightest doubt that tuis lady continued for her life-time in full . JHAI BJ LAL U. J. WALA PRASAD possession and enjoyment of the properties thus assigned to her. As a matter of fact some years later there was a further division and apportionment of property, consequent upon the dissolution of a family basiness, and here again a full one-fourth share was handed over to Musammat Genda. The principal question which we have to determine is the effect of the partition proceedings of 1884. The learned Subordinate Judge has assumed, almost without discussing the point, that the properties assigned to Musammat Genda at this partition were given to her in recognition of her right of maintenance. It is not perfeetly clear from his judgment which of two proposition be intended to affirm. He may have meant that the three brothers, Shib Charan Lal, Manna Lal and Bindraban never parted with any property at all in favour of Musammat Genda and created any estate in her favour. this point of view it would have to be contended that the each and moveables assigned to Musammat Genda were treated as representing money immediately needed by her for her maintenance and that the shares in the landed property made over to her remained all the time in the ownership of the three brothers, while Musammat Genda enjoyed only a permissive possession, by license of the real owners, in lieu of each which they would otherwise have to pay her for maintenance. This position is scarcely arguable and it has not been seriously pressed upon us on behalf of the appellants. The amount of the property made over to Musammat Ganda, being far in excess of what she needed for her comfortable maintenance, and the considerable sums assigned to her at the divisions of the moveables and the joint business make it impossible to suppose that there was no transfer of ownership and no estate created in her favour. In reply to the question whether or not the three surviving brothers or the heirs of those brothers, could at any given moment have resumed possession over the whole or any part of the immoveable property assigned to Musammat Genda in 1884, the only possible answer seems to be that they could not have done so, because the proceedings at the partition had amounted at the very least to a transfer of those properties in favour of Musammet Genda for her life-time. Now, assuming that a lifeestate was created by the partition of 1884 in favour of Musammat Genda, the real question in isone is: - who would succeed to that estate upon the death of that lady? The learned Subordinate Judge does not seem to have looked at the case from this point of view at all. He quotes decision in Debi Mangal Prosad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (1) as authority for the proposition that property taken upon a partition by a Hindu widow reverts on her death to the lawful owners of the estate from which that property was taken. As a matter of fact the decision in this case was that such property passed on the death of the widow to the heirs of her deseased husband. If that decision can be applied literally and fully to the facts of the ease now before us, it is so far from being an authority in favour of the plaintiffs that it is decisive against them. The plaintiffs are not the heirs of Lalji Mal; on the contrary, that gentleman's heir under the Hindu Law is the principal defendant, Jwala Prasad. As a matter of fact the case in question is distinguishable from the present. The property dealt with in the reported case was the share taken on partition by a Hindu mother, that is to say, a share to which the widow concerned had a legal right which she could have enforced if necessary by suit. In the present case, assuming that Lalji Mal died in a state of jointness with his brothers, his widow had a right to nothing except maintenance. What we have to determine is whether, the surviving brothers having under the circumstances allotted to the widow a full 1th share in the joint family property, such as would be taken by her husband had he survived until the date of the partition, is it to be presumed that they created in her favour the ordinary estate of a Hindu widow, passing on her death to the heirs of her husband, or are we to take it that they intended to create in her favour a special kind of life estate, with reversion on her death to the donors or heirs of the donors? We have been referred in argument to an old ease which is the foundation of much of the subsequent case-law on the subject, that of Sceemuty Rabutty Dasses v. Sibchunder Mullick (2). In that case, there having been a dispute in a Hindu family regarding the slaims of a

Hindu widow, a document was drawn up which expresily and in terms assigned certain property to that lady for her sole absolute use and benefit, in her character of heiress and legal personal representative of her deceased husband. The immediate point for datermination was whether the widow under this instrument took an absolute estate, or merely a life-estate devolving upon her death upon the heirs of her deseased husband. It was held that she took a life estate only and that the heirs of her deseased husband succeeded on her death to the corpus of the property. The fac's in that case seem to be distinguishable from those of the present case, because it was conceded that the widow was entitled as of right to some share and the only question was as to the amount of her share. Nevertheless it has to be noted in the present ease that Musammat Genda war, at any rate, entitled to something. She was entitled to maintenance and when the brothere of her deceased husband, in lieu of her right to maintenance, shose to assign certain property to her on partition, the question arises whether, in the absence of any evidence one way or other, it ought not to be assumed that they intended to give her the ordinary life-estate of a Hindu widow, with reversion after her death to the heirs of her deseased husband. We have come to the ecnelusion, however, that it is not necessary to rest the decision upon any mere presumption. There are circumstances in the case which seem to us very strongly to indicate that the intention of the brothers at the time of partition was to deal with Musammot Genda as the representative of her deceased husband and that they in fact dealt with her in this escapity. It would be very difficult to understand on any other supposition why they should bave given ber, not merely a 1th share in the immoveable property, but her full rateable share in the moveable property and in the assets of the joint family business when those same to be divided. If they looked upon themselves as dealing with a widow who only required maintenance at their hands, they would surely never have handed over to her large sums in eash, as representing ber late husbard's share in the moveable property of the family and in the joint family business. They would seareely have remained quiescent while she made consider. able sayings out of the property in her hands and acquired property for herself, or for the benefit of her daughter's sons. They would searcely have described the paper drawn up at the partition, on which they engrossed a list of the properties assigned to Musammat Gends, as the share of Lalji Mal. Moreover, the matter can be carried even further than this. There have been at least two litigations in this family, the particulars of which have been laid before The learned Subordinate Judge alludes to them in his judgment and does so principally for the purposes of confirming his opinion that there was no partition in the family until efter the death of Lalji Mal. It seems to us, however, that there are other significant circumstances cornected with these litigations. Kallu Mal, brother of the plaintiff Sakh Lal, had another son named Paran Mal, and on the 8th of January 1911 this Paran Mal instituted a suit for posses. sion by partition in respect of properties belonging to this family, on the allegation that he was the adopted son of Lalji Mal. Amongst the defendants were Manna Lal, Musimmet Genda, the daughter of Bindra. bar, the plaintiff Sakh Lal and other members of the family. Muszmmat Genda in her written statement very clearly pleaded that her daughter's sons were the ultimate beirs and successors to Lalji Mal's share in the joint family estate. The suit was eventually decided upon a finding that Puran Mal had failed to prove his alleged adoption, but when it came to an apportionment of shares, it is obvious that Puran Mal was given the share in the joint family property which world come to him on the assumption that Lalji Mal's th share was properly in the possession of Musammat Genda and was not available for apportionment amongst the descendants of Shib Charan Lal. Even more important is the suit which was brought by Manna Lal after the death of Musammat Genda. There was a dispute between this gentleman and other members of the family, including the defendant, Jwala Pracad, and Manna Lal came into Court claiming separate possession over certain items of Zemindari property. He stated in his plaint that on the death of Mes:mmat Genda the whole of the property which had been assigned to her on partition had descended to him by right of inheritance, though he did not explain the precise nature of this right. He contented JHABBU LAL C. JWALA PRASAD.

himself with saying that he would bring a separate suit hereafter to enforce the right thus elaimed. The important part of the case, however, lies in certain statements made by Manna Lal when he was examined on the 15th of July 1914 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Shabjabappar. It must be remembered that any statements made by Manna Lal, who died before the institution of the present suit, favourable to the defendant's case, are provable not merely as statements made against the interest of Manna Lal himself, but also because the plaintiffs in the present suit are, as regards a substantial portion of their claim, claiming through Manna Lal. Manna Lal's account of the partition of 1834 is to some extent confused by a misapprehension which had somehow grown up in his mind, to the effect that Shib Charan Lal as well as Lalji Mal had died before the partition. We now know that Lalji Mal died in 1879, the partition was in 1884, while Shib Charan Lal diel in 1889. Allowing, however, for this apparently honest missonesption in the mind of the deponent, there are passages in Manna Lal's deposition which have an important bearing on the questi n now in issue. He seems to have been expressly asked why four lots were prepared at the partition of 1:84, if there were only himself and Bindraban alive at the time. He deposed as follows:- There were three brothers and so four lots were prepared. As regards the brothers who had died, their respective shares were given to their heirs by sommon consent," He went on to say that it was in this way that property had been allotted to Musammat Genda, but hastily added that this was only for her maintenance. When it was pressed upon him that this last assertion of his was not consistent with what he had said just before, he said that he had made a mistake in the first instance but that what he now said, namely, as to the assignment in Musam. mat Genda's favour being only for her maintenance, was correct. When further pressed in pross-examination, however, we find him recorded as making the following assertion : -"When Musammat Genda became the owner of a share, then her property will descend to her daughter's sons."

This is a literal translation of the words of the deposition as recorded in the vernaeu. lar. It is, of course, possible that the question had been put to Manna Lal in a bypothetical form and that he only meant to may that, if Musammet Genda had received a share, then of course that share would descend to the beirs of ber late busband. Considering however the deposition as a whole, the significant admissions with which it commenced and with which it ended seem to us of greater weight and importance than the comewhat half. hearted attempt made by Manna Lal to shaftle out of them in the middle of the deposition. Looking at this statement, along with the other items of evidence which we have already considered, it seems to us beyord question that, whatever may have been the motives influencing Shib Charan Lal, Manna Lal and Bindraban in the year 1884, they did join to confer upon Muszamat Ganda in respect of the property assigned to her at the partition the ordinary estate of a Hindu widow, on the understanding that they were dealing with her as the representative of her late busband and with the deliberate intention that the share thus assigned to her should descend after her death to the heirs of Lalji Mal under the Hinda Law. The only serious argument that we can see against such a conclusion is that the conduct thus assribed to the three brothers is too improbable to be believed, or, at any rate, to be believed upon the somewhat slender materials available on this record. It is, however, impossible for any one to say now what precise motives may have influenced the conduct of these three brothers in the year 1884. Although we have ascepted the finding that Lalji Mal died in a state of jointness with his brothers, we are bound to admit the possibility (when we come to deal with an argument of this sort) that the brothers were perfectly aware that the question of a separation of the family had been discussed in the life-time of Lalji Mal and that they were only honeatly carrying out an arrangement which they knew had been virtually determined upon before, and which would have been carried out if Lalji Mal's death had not supervened. We need not do more than put this forward as a suggestion to meet an argument based upon probabilites. Our decision we base upon what seems to us a fair and reas inable consideration of the evilence as a whole. The finding which we have record. ed obviously disposes of the entire ease, Jwala Prasad, defendant, is the rightful beir

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 152, O. XLVII—Decree, amendment of—Amendment not merely clerical—Court expressly acting under s, 152—Order, whether appealable.

Plaintiff sued to recover a certain sum of money as his share of certain trees sold from common land. The suit was decreed, but according to the calculations of the Court the amount payable to plaintiff was found to be less than demanded by him. He objected to the calculations and stated that the distribution of the amount involved had been worked out on an incorrect area. The Court professing to act under section 152, Civil Procedure Code, allowed the objection and amended the decree:

Held, that the Court must be deemed legally to have acted under Order XLVII and not under section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code and that order amending the decree was appealable.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Judge, Delhi, dated the 9th June 1920, rejecting the appeal with costs by holding that the appeal to his Court does not lie against the order of the Munsif, First Class, Delhi, dated the 6th April 1920, amending the decree of the Munsif, First Class, Delhi, dated the 17th November 1919.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants. Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- In this case the plaintiff sued to recover a sum of Rs. 69-12-0 as his share of certain trees sold from common The suit was decreed and according to the calculations of the First Court the amount payable to the plaintiff was found to be Rs. 53-10-10. The plaintiff subsequently objected to the calculations and stated that the distribution of the amount involved had been worked out on an incorrect area. The successor of the Munsif considered this application to be correct and acting under section 152, Civil Procedure Code, allowed an amendment of the deeres. Against this decision the defendants appealed and the District Judge has held that no appeal lies, as the order in question was passed under section 152.

The defendants have come up in second appeal and their Counsel urges that the Munsif's order was really under Order XLVII and not under section 152. This contention must be upheld. Section 152 refers merely to arithmetical or clerical errors which are patent on the face of the judgment or of the decree. In the present case the whole system of calculation adopted by the First Court was challenged in plaintiff's application and there was no more allegation of an arithmetical or elerical mistake. I hold, therefore, that the Munsif, although he purported to act under section 152, must be considered legally to have acted under Order XLVII, and an appeal, therefore, lay to the District Judge.

I accept the appeal and remand the ease to the lower Appellate Court for desision on the merits.

Court fee on appeal to be refunded. Costs to be costs in the case.

EMPEROR-RESPONDENT.

Opium Act (I of 1878), s. 9 (c), (g)—Authorised agent of licensec, right of, to possess opium—Register of sales, mistake in—Agent, whether liable.

The authorised agent of a retail licensee of opium, is entitled to possess opium to the extent of his license. [p. 994, col 1.]

Neither the rules, nor the terms of the license in the Punjab provide for any penalty against an authorised agent in respect of any mistake in the register of accounts of sales of opium. [p. 934, col. 2.]

while investigating a case (No. 44) happened to search accused Dani Chand's house and found 2 seers of opium, and on search of his shop he found 5 tolar of opium at 5.30 P. M. On inspecting his register he found that 2 seers of opium were down as the balance, and thus 5 tolar were found in excess.

He sent a ruq 1 to his than 2 as first information report and sent a telegram to the Excise Sub Inspector.

The assumed was sent up for trial by the Police.

GROUND.—The charge against him is rather a little vague. It recites breach of sections 137-133, which appear to be paragraphs of the Excise Manual, Volume II. Again it recites rule 49 (3), which is alleged to have been violated.

The charge is mainly under sestion 9 of Act I of 1878, and though no subsection is quoted, it seems that the subsections (c) and (g) were meant, as the words contained therein are Najais taur par apres quibza men rakha hua thu aur tumhare register ka hisab bhi galat darj tha."

I think the assused has not been prejudiced by the Magistrate's omission to mention sub-sections of the section 2.

But thinking that the appellant is an authorised agent of the retail vend lisauses. Mula Ram, he is authorised to keep opium under his license in his vend premises to the extent allowed by the license. But the license prescribes no limit and the opium found in his house (2 seers) and at his shop (5 tolas) were covered by his license and in my opinion his conviction under section 9 (c) of the Opium Act was not sustainable. Emperor v. Lalli (1) seems to apply to this case.

Under rule 49 (f) of the Opium Ast
"The licensee shall keep correct daily accounts of sales of opium in such form as the Financial Commissioner may from time to time prescribe."

When his shop was searched, the register kept in the shop and written by others for the applicant showed a sale of 21 chhitaks from 1st September 1919 to 8th September 1919 and there was found to be an excess of 5 tolss over the sales : but the Hindi bahi kapt by the petitioner showed a sale of 16 chhataks of opium in those dates (cide paragraph 3 of Zimni 1, dated 9th September 1919). The bahi and the register were taken possession of by the Sab Inspector at one and the same time. Thus it appears that the entries which the accused got made were not properly made by those who made them for him. From the statement of the Sub-Inspector before the Magistrate it will appear that the opium found at his house and shop (2 seers and 5 toles) was the sorrest balance in his Hindi bahi which the accused himself wrote, and that the register showed an excess of 5 toals. The Sub-Inspector's statement is not corroborated by his Zimni entry 3 of 9th September 1919.

But as he has given his statement on solemn affirmation, it should be considered to be correct, and that the balance actually found on search tallied with the accused's private buhi in Hindi in his own handwriting. In such a case the mistake in the register would be a bona fide one and the accused is entitled to an acquittal.

of 5 chhataks as given in the Zimnis and the register was earelessly kept, a lenient punishment under section 9 (q) of the Opium Act was called for when we take into account that the accused is illiterate and was then ill, and his brother in law had died. In that case the punishment at seven days' imprisonment which the arcasel has already undergone should be considered sufficient.

For these reasons I submit the records of the ease on the revision side for orders of the High Court of Judiesture at Lahore. The assumed was released on bail by order of this Court dated 1st April 1920.

Mr. Bair-ud din Kureshi, for the Petitioner,

Lala Sheo Narain, for the Pablic Prosesa.

tor, for the Respondent.

ORDER -In this case the petitioner, who is the authorised agent of a retail liseusse of opiam, has been convicted of offenses papishable under sestion 9 of the Opiam Act. The charges were vague and the judgment of the Magistrate also is vague, but apparently the Magistrate's meaning was that the petitioner had infringed the provisions of the Act by the illegal posses. sion of five tolas of opium and had also made mistakes in his ragister. On a position for ravision tha Sassions to that officer has forwarded the proseed. inge under sestion 438, Oriminal Procedure Code, pointing out that under the authority of Emperor v. Lalli (1) the petitioner being the authorized agent of the licensee is autho. rized to posses opium to the extent of his license. The learned Judge has also pointed that though there was a mistake in the regular ragister of sales, the Hindi register kept by the petitioner was correst. In the opinion of the Sessions Judge at the most the offence was a technical one and the petitioner's action was more excusable on the ground that be himself does not understand Urdu and was at the time ill and in mourning.

As for the illegal possession of 5 toals of opium I agree with the dessions Judge that the petitioner being the authorized agent of the licensee and being authorized to possess opium and the amount found not being beyond the limit of his license, the conviction cannot stand. Enperor v. Lulti (1) was a clear authority in point. The learned Counsel for the Urown urges that the 2 seers of opium were found in the patitioner's house and that under the terms of his license he was only legally entitled to keep ment appears sound, but in the present case there was no definite charge against the petitioner for keeping opium in his house as opposed to his shop, nor is there any evidence to show that the house and the shop are in any way separate. Moreover, the charge was in respect of five tolas, which were found in the shop. The first part of the conviction, therefore, cannot stand.

As for the second part of the charge in respect of the mistake in the Urdu register, the learned Counsel for the petitioner points out that only the licensee himself sould be prosecuted. He refera to a strong authority in his favour Kalu Mal Rhetri, In the matter of (2). The rules and the forms of licenses in Bengal may be different from those prevailing in the Punjab, but I notice that in this Province neither the rules nor the terms of the license provide for any penalty against the authorised agent in such a matter. I hold, therefore, that the whole sonviction was legally unjustified and accepting the petition I acquit the petitioner.

pay the expenses incurred by the accused is not justified, as the adjournment was not caused through any fault of his.

Oriminal Reference by the District Magia-

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the District Magistrate of Sholapur asking the High Court to exercise the powers conferred by section 439 of the Oriminal Prosedure Code with regard to an order of costs under section 344, Oriminal Procedure Code, passed by the Second Class Magistrate of Malsiras. That order was that the expenses incurred by the 10th assused in bringing a Pleader from Pandharpur, a distance of thirty-two miles, and going back the same distance and also his Pleader's fees which had been settled by the parties should be paid by the complainant.

Now, I could understand that if an adjournment takes place for which the examplainant is solely to blame, then an order sould be made that the complainant should pay any costs which may have been incurred by the assused. But in this esse, as the District Magistrate points out, the complainant was not at fault as the Magistrate had taken cognizance of the offence upon Police report. The Police Sub-Inspector was responsible for keeping the witnesses in question present on the date fixed, and not the complainant who was only a witness. We agree with the reasons given by the District Magistrate for setting aside the order passed by the Second Class Magistrate, and accordingly the order is set aside. If the amount has been paid, it must be refunded.

CAIMINAL APPEAL No. 519 of 1920,

FAQIRIA-CONV OF-APPELLANT

EMPEROR — REAPINGENE, Arms Act (XI of 1973), s. 20—Chhavi, concealment of—Sentence, suitable.

Where a person is convicted under section 20 of the Arms Act of having concealed a chhari, and nothing is known against him, and it is not shown that he has not broken the law in the past, the maximum sentence provided by the section is not called for, nor is a merely nominal sentence.

Appeal from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, exercising enhanced powers under section 30 of the Oriminal Procedure Code, Kasur, District Labore, dated the 27th July 1920.

Lila Rama Nand, for the Appellant. She'kh Niaz Ali, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Faqiria, has been convicted of having consealed in his possession, a chavi. Under section 20 of the Arms Act he has been sentenced to undergo seven years' rigorous imprisonment.

The evidence for the prosecution shows that Bhagwan Das, head constable, was patrolling at night, accompanied by Ala Ditta, constable, and two sweepers, and at a bridge across the canal they came upon Faqiria and one Bhaga, who on enquiry said they were going to a cartain village to buy a buffalo. The nature of Faqiria's stick aroused Bhagwan Dae's suspicions, and he searched Faqiria and found a chhavi head in his waistoost pocket.

The defence is, that the Police palmed off the charm head on to Faqiria because he did not bribe the head constable. Certain defence witnesses have been called, but I agree with the learned Magistrate in holding the case fully proved.

The weapon was consealed, and I take it that though the appellant did not know that he was going to meet a Police Officer that night he knew that he might possibly do so, and so he thought it prudent to earry the weapon concealed. I consider, therefore, that he has rightly been convicted under section 20 of the Arms Act.

As to sentence the appellant is a chimba, and nothing seems to be known against, his character in the past. The habit of carrying chimis seems, unfortunately, to be on the increase, and sertainly requires, righton repression. The Magistrate remarks, such weapons are not earried for any incoment purpose, though I suppose it must be admitted that they may cometimes be carried for self defence. But I am not prepared to say that the maximum sentence must be inflicted in every case merely because the weapon in question is a chha:i. To pass nominal sentences in such cases would, of course, be useless, but if the habit is so engrained that substantial sentences will not check it, then I do not think it can be stamped out even by infliction of the maximum sentense. In Khem Singh v. Emperor (1) the maximum was inflieted because the offender was a man of very bad character, who had previously been convieted of offences under sections 414 and 457, and bad also been bound over to keep the peace and to be of good behaviour. Here nothing is known against the appellant in the past, and we are not justified in assuming that he has ever broken the law in the past.

I uphold the conviction but reduce the sentence to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1880), ss. 193, 423—Fabricating false document—Sale-deed containing false recital of marriage executed—Offence—"Fraudulently," meaning of—Deprivation of property—Deception and injury.

Accused executed a sale-deed in favour of a woman alleging that she was married to him on a particular date and transferring to her certain land in lieu of dower. In fact, no marriage took place between the accused and the woman who was the wife of another person:

Held, that the only possible inference was that he was acting in furtherance of his desire to secure the person of the woman, and his intention was to use this document and false statements therein in judicial proceedings to mislead the Judge and that, therefore, he was guilty of an offence of fabricating false evidence under section 153, Indian Penal Code. [p 997, col. 1.]

Held, also, that the accused had a further intention to cause injury to the woman and her true husband and to support his false claim to that status and that, therefore, he was also guilty under section 423,

Indian Penal Code [p 997, col. 1]

The words "fraud," "fraudulently" and "to defraud" in section 423, Indian Penal Code, are not confined to connote deprivation of property and the deception of the person so deprived. It is not essential that the person deceived or to be deceived and the person injured or intended to be injured should be one and the same. [p. 997, col. 1.]

Mr. B. L. Mitter (with him Babu Santosh Kumar Bose), for the Crown.

Babu Birbhusan Dutt (with him Babu Satis Chunder Ghatak), for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—The prosecution in this case has reference to a document registered on the 10th of July 1919 by the person Ahi Lal, against whose acquittal the present appeal has been preferred by Government. The document purports to be a conveyance transferring to one Marium Bibi four bighas of land in lieu of a sum of Rr. 49/said to be due to her on account of dower. The document describes Marium as the wife of Ahi Lal and recites that the marriage was celebrated on the date borne by the document, namely, the 12th of Baisakh.

It has been found by both the Courts below that this document was executed by the accused Ahi Lal, that no marriage between Ahi Lal and Marium ever took place, and that, in fact, Marium was and is the wife of one Moti Mandal of village

We have been taken over the whole of the evidence in the case, and we are satisfied that the findings of the Courts below are correct. The question in this appeal then is whether the accused has committed the offences punishable under sections 193 and 423 of the Code.

We have found that the statements made in this document are false. There is extraneous evidence that the accused is on bad terms with the father of the woman Marium, and also that he has sought to obtain her in marriage. With what intention, then, did the accused fabricate this document? It is suggested on his behalf in the course of argument that he was merely perpetrating a bad practical joke. He himself has offered no explanation. The only possible inference, therefore, is that he was acting in furtherance of his desire to seeare the person of this woman, and this, in the circumstances, he could only do by judicial proceedings. We can only conclude, therefore, that his intention was to use this document and the false statements therein in judicial proceedings and thereby mislead the Judge.

He is also, in our opinion, guilty under section 423 of the Indian Penal Code. The statements in the document relating to the consideration for the transfer are false, and the only question then is whether the accused in making the document was acting fraudulently. Here the contention advanced on behalf of the accused is that the words "fraud," "fraudulently" and "to defraud" connote deprivation of property, and the deception of the person so deprived. We are unable to confine the words in question to this restricted meaning. We are not of opidion that deprivation of property, actual or intended, is an essential ingredient in fraud, or the intention to defraud, and we are further of opinion that it is not essential that the person deseived or to be deseived and the person injured or intended to be injured should be one and the same. In the present case we have already found an intention to deceive and mislead. The further intention to sause injury to the woman and her true bueband, and to support assused's own false claim to that status is elearly to be deduced from the facts. The language of the section (section 423) is thus satisfied, and we find the assuted guilty of the offense punishable thereunder. We, therefore, restore the order of the First Court and sentence the adensed under each section to nine months' rigorous imprisonment: the two sentences to run conenrrently. J. P.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), 1. 545-Compensation, when awardable.

Accused dishonestly induced the complainant to part with her ornaments, and these he pledged with D. He was convicted under section 420 of the Penal Code and sentenced to imprisonment and fine, and the Magistrate directed that out of the fine, a sum should be paid to D. as compensation under section 545 of the Criminal Procedure Code:

Held, that the order under section 645 could not be sustained, as under it compensation is only awardable to a person for the injury caused by the offence committed, and that as the offence committed in this case was cheating, no injury was caused to D. thereby.

Oriminal reference made by the District

Magistrate of Abmednagar.

JUDGMENT,-The assused was convicted of an offence punishable under section 420. Indian Penal Code, and sentenced by the Magistrate to four months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100. The accused had dishonestly induced the complainant to part with her ornaments, and these were pledged with a person called Dalishand. The Magietra'e directed that out of the fine, if recovered, Rs. 35 should be paid as compensation to Daliehand under sestion 545, Oriminal Procedure Code. But that section only enables the Magistrate to direct that the whole or any part of the fine, if resovered, should be applied in compensation for the injury eaused by the offence committed. The offence committed was cheating, and no injury was saused to Daliehand by the cheating. We think, therefore, that the District Magistrate was right in asking this Court to revise the order passed by the Trying Magistrate under section 545. Oriminal Procedure Code, and the order must be set asife, and if any compensation has been paid to Dalieband, it must be refanded.

Trial by jury—Charge—Misdirection—Discrepancies and contradictions in evidence, how to be dealt with in charge—Duty of Judge.

In determining whether there has been misdirection to a jury, the charge must be judged as a whole, and it must be seen whether the case for both sides has been fairly put, so that the jury understood what they had to decide and come to a right decision. [p. 498. col. 2.]

In dealing with discrepancies and contradictions in the statements of prosecution witnesses in his charge, the Judge should draw attention to the more essential items, and the strongest argument advanced by the defence; merely referring the jury to the speech of the Pleader for the defence is not sufficient. [p. 992, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Sylhet, dated the 14th July 1921.

Babus Datarathi Sanyal and Hamendra Kumar Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Orr, for the Orown.

JUDGMENT,-The appellants have been convicted of rioting and sentenced under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code to two years' rigorous imprisonment each. There can be no doubt that on the 23rd of November last a serious fight took place between the appellants on one side and the principal prosecution witnesses in this case on the other. Men of both parties were separately sent up for trial on charges of rioting and other offerces. The trial of some men of the complainant's party resulted in their acquittal and the trial of seven men of the appellant's party resulted in the acquittal of one of the seven and the conviction of the others as stated above.

From the portions of the evidence that have been read to us there seems to be very little doubt that what really happened was a mutual fight between the two parties, very probably pre arranged. But in reporting the matter to the Police both parties tried to make out a case of pure aggression by the other side. According to the accused, the occurrence took place at or near what is described as Atkayari plot and the actual beating is said to have taken place at a point marked 'A' in the Police map Exhibit 3. According to the prosecution, the occurrence took place at a spot marked "a" in the map about half a mile to the east of the other plot. Every thing seems to point to the real occurrence having taken place at neither of these places. The jury, however, have expressly found that the occurrence took place at the spot where the prosecution witnesses say it did. It is contended and we think fairly contended that in coming to this conclusion the jury were not properly directed by the learned Sessions Judge. Saveral points in favour of the case for the appellants have been put to us by the learned Pleader who has appeared before us for them. But we do not propose to deal with these points seriatim. In judging the charge to the jury one sannot say that there has been misdirection because every point in favour of the accused has not been put to the jury. The charge must be judged as a whole, and one must see whether judging it as a whole, the case for the two sides had been fairly put so that the jury can understand what they have to deside and some to a right conclusion. What we find in the present charge is that it was never suggested to the jury that both the case for the prosecution and the case for the defence might be false. To exemplify this we may take one of the several points urged. In his comments on the evidence of the investigating Police Offiser, the learned Judge remarks "He (the investigating Police Officer) did not see any marks of struggle etc., on any of the spots where the occurrence is located by either side and in their visinity." In the first place there is a positive misdirection in saying that the investigating Officer found no marks of struggle in the vicinity of the place of occurrence as pointed out by the appellants. Both the map and his evidence show that marks were found in plots marked 11 and III which are very near to the plot marked "A." What we think is more serious in this connection is that the evidence of the investigating Offiser that he found marks of occurrence at other places than those alleged by the two parties, plots 'A' and 'a', was not put to the jury! One cannot but think that if this view of the case had been put to the jury it was very unlikely that they would have some to the finding that the place of occurrence was that described by the prosecution. There are several other matters which make it extremely improbable that that part of the proceeution story is true. Some of these have been put to the jury in the charge. But they have been put more from the point of view that the jury had to consider whether the place of occurrence was at "a" or A' and not from the point of view whether the prosecution had succeeded in proving the place of occurrence at a and not anywhere else.

Also we cannot entirely approve of the manner in which the learned Sessions Judge has dealt with the discrepancies and contradictions in the statements of the procesution witnesses in his charge. He referred the jury to the speech of the learned Pleader for the defence. It is not necessary for him to repeat every thing that has been said in such a speech. But he ought to have drawn the attention of the jury to the more essential items and the strongest argument that had been advanced for the defence. A mere reference to the arguments of the Pleaders was insufficient.

Taking the sharge as a whole we are not satisfied that the issue before the jury was properly understood by them. Taking this view we cannot uphold the conviction and we do not think, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, that ary useful end would be served by ordering a re-trial. We accordingly allow this appeal and set aside the conviction of the appellants and direct that their bail-bonds be discharged.

"Any building," meaning of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439 (5)—Acquittal - Revision at the instance of Local Government,

The words "any building" in section 96 of the Bombay District Municipal Act are wide enough to cover a building in a private Mahla and permission of the Municipality is necessary to build any building within the Mahla. [p 999, col 2.]

A High Court is prohibited by section 439 (5) of the Criminal Procedure Code from entertaining proceedings in a case of acquittal by way of revision at the instance of the Local Government as the latter can appeal from the acquittal under section 417 of the said Code. [p. 1000, col. 1.]

Report by the District Magistrate, Hyder-

Mr. C. M. Libo, First Assistant Public

Prosecutor for bind, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.-In the ease ensideration the assused admittedly erested three walls in the Municipal limits of Tando Allabyar without the permission of the Municipality and was prosecuted by the Municipality under section 96 of the Munisipal Act III of 1901 for baying done so. His defence was that the walls had been erested not on Manieipal ground but in a private "Mable", and that the permission of the Municipality was not, therefore. required. The Bench Magistrates of Tando Allabyar have accepted this contention and acquitted the accused. The District Magistrate of Hyderabad has referred the case to us with a recommendation that the acquittal be set aside and a re trial ordered under section 439 of the Oriminal Procedure Ccde.

It is quite elear that the acquittal was erroneous, for, as held in Khushal tas Moolchand v. Emperor (1), the words "any building" in section 95 are wide enough to cover a building in a private Mahla, and the plea set up and assepted by the Magistrate affords no valid defence to the prosecution. But we do not think that we should interfere in this case. The Assistant Public Prosecutor has drawn our attention to the case of Emperor v. Tirithdas Kewalram (2), in which it was held that this Court has jurisdiction to interfere with an acquittal under section 439, Oriminal Procedure Code, but that this revisional jurisdiction should only be exercised sparingly, and generally only in cases where there is an error of law and pressdure patent on the face of the judgment. This, no doubt, is a decision in his favour; but, without entering into the question whether sub-section (4) of section 439 offers a bar to our interference, we think that such interference is clearly opposed to the provisions of sub-section (5) of that section. District Magistrate moves us as an agent of Government and Government could have appealed from the accused's acquittal under section 417, Criminal Procedure Code. Thus in Emperor v. Kalekhan Sardarkhan (3) the Court imposed a fine in an appeal from an sequittal under section 96 of this same Act. As no such appeal has been brought, subsection (5) prohibits us from entertaining proceedings by way of revision at the instance of the Local Government, and we cannot in a matter of this kind differentiate the District Magistrate from the Local Government.

We, therefore, refuse to interfere, and direct the record and the proceedings to be returned.

Trial by jury—Charges of rioting and murder— Deceased already suffering from infirmity—Charge to jury—Duty of Judge—Misdirection.

Where in a trial by jury upon charges of rioting armed with deadly weapons, and murder, it appears that the person whose death was caused was suffering from a disease which accelerated his death, and the injuries described in the medical evidence were in themselves not apparently sufficient to cause immediate death, it is the duty of the Judge in his charge to the jury, to place these facts before them, and to ask them whether they are satisfied that the accused, when attacking the deceased, knew or had reason to believe that the injuries caused were likely to cause death and whether it could be inferred that death was intended to be caused. An omission on the part of the Judge to do this, amounts to a misdirection to the jury. [p. 1006, col. 1.]

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Manmatha Nath Muteries and Assini Kumar Gupta, for the Appellants.

Mr. Orr, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT .- The appellants in there eases were tried before the Second Additional Sessions Judge of Buckergunge and a jury and the jury unanimously found them guilty on all the charges found against them. All the accused were charged with rioting armed with deadly weapons and also with being guilty of murder in consequence of one Nebaluddi having been murdered in prosecu. tion of the common object of the unlawful Four of the assused were also assembly. convicted of murder after into operation the provisions of section 34, Indian Penal Code. All the accused have been sentenged to transportation for life and further sentences have been passed of three years' rigorous imprisonment each under section 148, Indian Penal Code, the sentences to run concurrently. The appellant Kabiruddin has further been convicted of an individual act of causing burt with a dangerous wearon and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment under section 324-this sentence also to run concurrently with the sentence of transportation for life.

An objection has been taken to the framing of the charges of murder; but we see no reason why in the present case the persons alleged to have taken a more immediate part in the causing of the death of the deceased should not be charged under section 302 read with section 34, Indian Penal Code, and also charged with others with constructive murder under the provisions of section 149, nor can we accept the contention that, on the facts alleged and found, section 34 is not applicable to the case of the appellants who have been convicted under section 302 read with that section. But we are of the opinion that there has been a serious misdirection in putting the medical evidence before the jury Assord. ing to the medical evidence, Nehaladdi, the person found to have been mardered, had four injuries on his person, three wounds in his head scalp deep and a deep sat wound on his side. It was also found that the membranes of the brain were deeply enn. gested and covered with a thick layer of esagulated lymph. In the opinion of the Civil Surgeon who held the post morten examination, death was due to shock and bemorrhage resulting from the injuries just mentioned and probably asselerated by the condition noted in the membrane of the brain which appeared to be of old stand. ing. In putting the medical evidence to the jury, the learned Sessions Judge correstly put to them explanation of section 239, Indian Penal Code, which provides that a person who esuses bodily injury to another who is labouring under a disorder, disease or bodily infirmity and thereby asselerates the death of that other shall be desmed to have caused his death. But what he omitted to do was to point out that, if a person was suffering from an injury which would render injuries which would not have a fatal effect to one ordinary man, fatal to that person, it does not necessarily follow, as it would in the case of a healthy man, that the person is fluting those injuries knew it to be likely that death would be eaused thereby. The fact that the deceased was suffering from a disease which accelerated his death and also the fact that the injuries described in the medical evidence are in themselves not apparently sufficient to cause immediate should have been pointed out to the jury and they should have been asked whether they were satisfied that the assused when attacking Nebaladdi knew or had reason to believe that the injuries they eaused to him were likely to cause death and whether it sould be inferred that they intended to sause death. It may be that the view of the jury was that when a number of persons armed with spears did attack a person, they intended to esuse his death and that the fast that he died a little sooner owing to unknown infirmities did not affect the case. But it may also be that, had the bearing of the medical evidence on the intention of the accused been properly put to the jury, they would not have been able to some to the decleion they did that by causing the death of Nehaluddi the offence of murder was committed. Taking this view, we must hold that there has been a misdirection and that that misdirection has in effect caused a misearriage of justice. But having regard to the fact that the assused have also been convicted and sentenced for the offence of rioting armed with deadly weapons which conviction is, in no way, affected by this misdirection, we do not think it nessessary to order a re-trial. We also think that, having regard to the youth of the appellant, Hayyat Ali, who is recorded to be 14 years of age, the sentence on him may be considerably reduced We accordingly allow these appeals to this extent: the convictions of the appellants under section 302 read with section 149, Indian Penal Code, are set aside and also the convictions of the four appellants, Ainuddi Chowkider, Barukhan, Shujaddi and Khadan Ali under sestion 302 read with section 34, Indian Penal Code, are set aside and also the sentence of transportation for life passed under those sections. We affirm the convictions of the appellants under sestion 148, Indian Penal Code, and also the conviction of Khabiruddin under section 324, Indian Panal Code, and uphold the sentences passed on them under these sections, except in the case of the accused Hayyat Ali. We reduce the sentence passed on this accused, Hayyat Ali, to one year's rigorone imprisonment.

However unnatural, in the ordinary sense of the word, the cause of a death might be, it would not come within the meaning of the word 'unnatural' as used in section 45 of the Criminal Procedure Code so as to require to be reported immediately unless it occurred fairly soon after the cause [p 1002, col. 2]

The guilt of an accused should not be inferred from the omission by the accused of an available true and complete defence and substitution for it of unsustainable falsehoods. It is the duty of a Magistrate to find out whether an accused person is guilty or innocent, not merely to decide whether the pleas he chooses to put forward are sound or not. [p 1004, col. 1.]

Intention necessarily implies a mens rea, a consciousness of doing wrong A Mukkaddam or Kotwar cannot be convicted under section 45 of the Criminal Procedure Code for an omission to make a report of a sudden accident or suspicious death if he honestly believes that there was no necessity for him to make the report and the view held by him is a reasonable view [p. 003, col. 1.]

A nominal penalty of a pie only need be imposed if the accused is guilty of nothing more than a slight error of judgment which had no harmful consequences whatsoever if in such a case the responsible authorities choose to prosecute and the Magistrate is bound to convict when the offence is proved [p. 100', col. 2.]

Revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Raipur, dated the 17th November 1921, in Oriminal Appeal No 14) of 1921.

Mr. J. O. Ghosh, for the Applicant. Mr. S. R. Pandit, for the Crown.

ORDER.-Domar Singh Kurmi, the applicant for revision, is the Mukaddam of the village of Jarur in the Raipur District. He has been convicted of an offence punish. able under section 170 of the Indian Penal Code, of intentionally omitting to give notice to the Police of a death in his village which he was legally bound to give. Jodhan Panka, Sirdar Chamar and Bahorik Panka, all Kotwars of the same village, were convicted along with him. The Mckaddam was fined Rs. 20 and cash Kotwar was fined Rs. 10. The Mukaddam chope appealed to the District Magistrate, who dismissed his appeal, and he has now applied to this Court for revision. On his petition a Rule was issued to the District Magistrate to show earse why the convictions of all four assued should not be set saide.

The circumstances are these. 11th of April 1921 one Talaram, Brahman of Jarur, fell from a tree. He died, apparently from the effects of the fall, at 2 r. M. on the 13:h of April. The Mukaddam thought no special report of the death was necessary, as there was nothing sad len or suspicious about it, and the body was barnt in the usual source on the same day. On the 14th of April, probably in the forenoon, though this is not elear nor is it of any particular sonsequence, the Sab. Inspector in charge of the Station House visited the village in the course of one of bis usual rounds and was told all about the death. He was apparently of opinion that the death ought to have been reported before the body was burnt and that the raport made to him after that could not be said to have been made "forthwith." In this the two Courts appear to have agraed with him. With the expediency of prosecution in such a case I am, of sourse, not concerned, but a venture to say that, to my not very long and som awhat out-ofdate experience as a District Officer, such a prosecution appears likely to discourage rather than to stimulate reporting.

section 45 of the Criminal Under Procedure Code, every Makaddam Kotwar is bound to communisate forthwich to the nearest Station House Offiser Magistrate the courrence in or near the village "of any sudden or unnatural death or of any death under suspicious circum. stances." Now there was nothing suspicious about this death, nor was it sudden. In the memorandum submitted by the District Magistrate it is suggested that it was both sudden and unnatural. But I prefer the view taken by the learned District Magistrate himself in the appeal and by the Magie. trate who tried the ess, that it was unnatural but not sudden. It seems to me that, however unnatural, in the ordinary sense of the word, the cause of a death might be, it would not come within the meaning of the word 'annatural' as used in section 45 of the Oriminal Procedure Code so as to require to be reported immediately unless it ossurred fairly soon after the cause. If, for instance. Tularam had lingered for several weeks after his fall and had then died. solely from the effects of the fall, that would surely not have been regarded as a death which had to be reported forthwith, though it would be just as unnatural as if Tularam had died within a few minutes of his fall, or had been killed by it icstantaneously. The length of the period between the cause and the effect which obviates the necessity for an immediate report must be largely a matter of opinion, and the opinion that a period of two days was sufficient for this purpose in this partienlar case may be wrong, but it is by no means unreasonable. Indeed, I am inslined to hold it myself. Now, falsehoods in a defence do not in this country even tend to indicate the guilt of the accused, as the learned District Magistrate bas suggested in his memoran. dum. Even the entire omission of an available true and complete defence and the substitution for it of unsustainable falsehoods are so closely in accordance with the common, indeed almost universal, course of human sondust that we cannot infer from such a defense that the guilt of the accessed is likely. But the true de'ence has not baen entirely omitted here, though it is not pat forward very clearly. In any case, it is the duty of a Magistrate to find out whether an coused person is guilty or innocent, not merely to decide whether the pleas he shooses to put forward are sound or not. Now, it is clear from the evidence that the Mukaddam thought that there was no necessity for an immediate report of Tala. ram's death, because he lived for two days after the assident, and it was for that reason that he sent no report. The Kotware, of course, did not make a report because the Mokaddam told them it was not necessary. This cannot possibly be called an intentional failure to report. Intention neget. sarily implies a mens rez, a consciousness of doing wrong. The Mukaddam held the perfeatly reasonable view, which, as I have said before, I am even inclined to think was the right view that there was no necessity for an immediate report.

But even if it be granted that the failure to report did some within the terms of section 176 of the Indian Penal Code and was a punishable offence, hit was surely, in these eireumstances, one in which to more than a cominal penalty should have been imposed. If the responsible arthorities shoose to prosecute, and an offeres is proved, the Magistrate is bound to convict, but be need not impose any heavier penalty than a fine of one pie. The Mukaddam was, in any care, guilty of nothing more than a very rlight error of judgment which had no harmful sonsequences whatsoever, and the Kotwars were guilty of accepting his slightly wrong interpretation of the rules on the anbject of the immediate reporting of deathe. But I have held that they are not suilty of even a technical offence. All the four convictions are, therefore, set aside and the amounts of the fines, which have presumably been paid. will to refunded.

JUDGMENT.

ORIMINAL GOVERNMENT APPEAL No 1 1921 Tawnox, J.—In this case cas Baroda Kanta Majumdar was placed on his trial on a charge of offering resistance to his lawful apprehension and of essaping from lawful enstudy, offences punishable under section 225 B of the Indian Penal Code. Two so assused, his son Monoranjan and one Somiran, were sharged with resening Baroda from lawful sustody. All three were further charged with assaulting the peor, Nawab Ali, whose duty it was to arrest or assist the Bailiff in arresting Baroda Kanta. Somiran was further charged with assaulting the Bailiff and with removing the peon's badge. The precent appeal is directed against the order of acquittal made in the case of all three by the Fourth Presidency Magistrate.

The accused Baroda Kanta Majumdar owed some Rs. 700 under a Small Cause Court decree obtained against him by one tarat Chandra Ghosh. In execution of this decree a warrant for the arrest of Barada Kanta was issued. On the morning of the 13th July, the decree-holder, Bailiff Nityananda Das and peon, Nawab Ali, proceeded to house No. 14, Jagurnath Sur Lane, in which Barods with his wife and son occupied two rooms, in order to execute this warrant. That the decree holder and his party went to arrest Baroda Kanta is not disputed but while the proceedation witnesses say that Baroda came outside, was there arrested, resented and escaped, the defence says that Baroda was arrested within one of his two rooms, there struggled and made resistance, and was assisted by his son, Manoranjan, in effecting his escape. It is further said that in this room. there was a lady, presumably Baroda's wife. The Magistrate has apparently accepted the ease for the defence and, finding that the warrant was not shown to Baroda, and, that the Bailiff and decree holder were not entitled to enter the room, holds that Baroda was entitled to resist and his son entitled to assist him. On these grounds he acquite Baroda and his son. The third accused he acquits on the ground that he was not present. Now it is not necessary that a Bailiff excenting a Civil Court warrant should in the first instance show the warrant. It is sufficient that he should apprise the person to be arrested of the contents of the warrant and show it if desired. [Rajani Kanto Fal v. Empercr (1) and Abdul Rahaman Sahib, In re (2) !. But it is quite elear in this case that the Bailiff was armed with the warrant issued, and it is further clear that Baroda well knew the purpose of the decree-holder and the Bailiff's visit. There could be no reason why the Bailiff should seek to withhold or conceal his warrant, and we have no doubt on the evidence that the warrant was in fact shown.

Even if we were to believe that the Bailiff and the deeree holder followed the judgment debtor into the room there was no reason why they should not do so. This was no ease of breaking open an outer door and the room itself was the outer of the two rooms ccoppied by Barcda. The presence of a woman therein was not even suggested to any one of the prosecution witnesses.

As to the alleged assault on the deeres. bolder, the peon and the Bailiff, the evidence is conflicting but what emerges beyond all dispute is that Baroda Kanta was arrested in execution of a warrant issued by the Small Cause Court, made his escape, and was assisted in so doing by the son Manoranjan. We, therefore, find these two guilty under section 225B, Indian Penal Code, and centence them, Baroda Kanta to pay a fine of Rs. 100, in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six weeks, Manoranjan to pay a fire of Rs. 50, in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one week. The evidence leaves some doubt as to the identity of the third accused, Somiran and, in his case we, therefore, do not disturb the order of aequittal.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASES Nos. 143 & 147

TEUNON, J.—These applications in revision arose out of one and the same crimical case. It appears that one Sarat Chandra Ghosh obtained a decree in the Presidency Small Cause Court against one Barada Kanta Majumdar and in execution for the balance due (some Rs. 700) took out a warrant for the arrest of the judgment-debtor. On the 13th of July about 7 A. M. he, accompanied by the Baitiff, one Nityananda Das entrusted with the execution of the warrant, proceeded to 14, Jugarnath Sur Lane, the house in which the judgment-debtor occupied two rooms.

It is not disputed that the Bailiff and the decree-holder did on the day in question go to 14. Jugarnath Sur Lane, in order to exacte the warrant entrusted to the Bailiff. What happened on their arrival is in dispute. The complainant who is the son of the judgment-debter alleges that the decree holder and the Bailiff caught hold of the judgment debter at the door of his room, and that when the judgment-debter tried to extricate himself, they followed him up into the room, in which was also the judgment-debter's wife; when the son assisted his father in freeing himself, the Bailiff pushed him and knocked him over.

The Trying Magistrate has found that the judgment debtor's wife was in fact with him in the room, that the Bailiff did not show his warrant, that the son did not know that Nityananda was a Bailiff, and was, therefore, justified in seeking to extricate his father and that the Bailiff was not justified in pushing him over. On these findings he has convicted the decree holder, Sarat Chandra Ghose, of the offence punishable under section 448 and the Bailiff, Nityananda, of the offence punishable under section 352 of the Indian Penal Code.

We are unable to accept the conclusions arrived at by the Trying Magistrate. It is not necessary that a Bailiff executing a Civil Court warrant should show his warrant in the first instance. It is sufficient that he should apprise the person concerned of its contents and thereafter show it, if desired. Now it is quite clear from Baroda Kanta's statement that he knew both the Bailiff and the decree-holder, and well knew why they sought to arrest him. Apart from that, there was no reason why the Bailiff should not display his warrant and we do not believe that he failed to do so. The evidence of the son and of his father taken together next shows that this was no ease of breaking open, or even open. ing either outer or inner door. The Bailiff were justified in and the decree-holder following up the judgment-debtor into his room, the outer of the two rooms occupied by him. We are not satisfied that the lady was in fast present in that room, and no objection to their entry was taken on that The story of his assault on Manoranjan we can but regard as an embellishment or exaggeration. We, therefore, hold that it has not been shown that either deeres-holder or Bailiff did more than they were entitled to do in execution of the warrant obtained by the decree-holder and entrusted to the Bailiff.

We, therefore, set aside the conviction of and the rentence imposed on each of the petitioners and direct that the fine, if paid, be now refunded.

JUDGMENT.

STUART, J .- We have before us Criminal Reference No. 743 of 1921 from Sessions Judge of Banares and Criminal Revisions Nos. 16 and 17 of 1:22. same point arises in all :- "Has the High Court authority to expunge from judgments of lower Courts remarks reflecting unfavourably upon the credibility or the character of witnesses in cases in which the effective orders of the Courts are not before the High Court either in appeal or on revision?" In the Reference the station-master of Benares Cantonment took exception to remarks reflacting upon himself made by a Magistrate at Benares in a judgment in a criminal case. that ease the accused persons Were aequitted. The station-master appeared as a witness for the defence. The Magistrate, while finding that the evidence did not justify a conviction, disbelieved the stationmaster in certain particulars. We have that the learned Sessions Judge believed the station-master to be telling the truth-a circumstance which goes far to remove the sting of the remarks made by the Magistrate.

In the two applications in revision, a business man and a Vakil gave evidence prosecution in a 6856 section 409 of the Indian Penal Code in the Gorakhpur District. The Magistrate found that no charge under section 409 could lie on the facts, and dismissed the ease acquitting the accused persons. He commented severely upon the two applicants holding that they had been disingenuous and acted with malice while giving their evidence. We are informed that District Magistrate did not agree with the Magistrate who tried the case these points and that he desired to appeal against the asquittal. The authorities. however, refused to appeal.

We have first to consider whether we have any authority to give the applicants the relief which they desire. Our procedure in criminal cases is to be found, except in regard to cases brought before the High Court in the exercise of its ordinary origi al criminal jurisdiction, in the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1938) This is clear from section 29 of the Letters Patent of this Court. We have, therefore, to examine the Criminal Procedure Code in order to discover whether it gives any authority.

It has been brought to our notice that other High Courts and Chief Courts and Judicial Commissioners' Courts have ordered portions of a record to be expunged and it is argued that the fact that they did so affords authority for us to do so.

We are referred, first, to the the ease of Baroda Noth Bhattacharya v. Karait Sheikh (1). There the Registrar of the Court was directed to expange from a judgment of the Sessions Judge remarks which reflected on the Local Government, the District Magistrate and the Deputy Magistrate.

In 1911 Twomey, J, of the Lower Burma Chief Court in the case of Ma Kya v. Kin Lat Gyi (2) held that he had the power to order passages to be expunged from a judgment but refused to use it.

In another case of the same Chief Court, Emperor v. Thomas Pellako (3), the Presiding Judge directed passages to be expunged from a judgment.

In Lachchu v. Emperor (4) the Judicial Commissioner of Oadh directed a passage, which reflected upon the conduct of a Counsel, to be expunged from the judgment.

It will be seen that in none of these decisions did the Court direct itself to the question as to whether it had any authority to pass such an order or whence it derived that authority. The cases are, however, not on all fours with the cases before us. There is no appeal before us. The eirenmetances in the eases before are different from the siroumstances in the eases to which we have referred, for, in those eases the Courts were adjudicating on final orders in appeal. We sent for the records to satisfy ourselves as to the regularity of the proceedings of the Courts in question. We may say in limine that the proseedings were perfectly regular. The matters having, however, come before us under section 435, we can exercise powers given bу section 439. Those are the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by sections 195, 423, 426, 427 and 428, or on a Court by section 338, subject to certain qualifications, one of which is that a finding of acquittal cannot be turned into one of conviction under section 439. None of these sections be invoked except section 423, and have to see whether saction 423 has application. Section 423 lays down in respect of appeals that, in an appeal from an order of acquittal, the Court may reverse that order. It may then take action towards further enquiry or towards a re-trial or may find the person acquitted guilty and sentence him. It lays down that in an appeal from a conviction the Court may reverse the finding. If the finding is reversed, the sentence is necessarily set aside. Then the Court may sequit or discharge the accused or direct his re-trial or commit him for trial. may uphold the finding. In the latter ease, there remains the sentence. When the finding is upheld, the sentence be altered. The finding may be altered. If that is the case, the sentence may be maintained or altered, and if the finding be upheld, the nature of the sentence may be altered but the alteration must not result in an enhancement. The section proceeds to lay down that in an appeal from any other order the Court may alter or reverse such order. This exhausts sub-sections (a), (b) and (c). They have clearly no bearing upon the present matters. Then follows the sub-section (d). "The Court may make any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper."

The nature of consequential or incidental orders under this sub-section was discussed by a Fall Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Mehi Singh v. Mangal Khanda (5). That Fall Bench considered that the only sonsequential or incidental orders within the purview of the provision were orders which follow as a matter of course, being the nesessary complements to the main order passed, without which the latter would be incomplete or ineffective (such as directions as to the refund of fines realised acquitted appellants, or on reversal of acquittals as to the restoration of sompensation paid under section 250) for which no separate authority is needed, and (not?) orders which though ancillary in character require more than the support of a Criminal Court's inherent jurisdiction and could not be passed without express anthority. We agree generally with the view taken in the Calcutta decision, and, on that view, the order which we are asked to pass is not a consequential or insidental order. It sanuot be said on this interpretation that the expunging of remarks from the record which reflect on certain witnesses is a consequential or incidental order. Such expunction would, in no sense, be consequent on or incident to the effective order of the Court below, which in these eases is contained in the finding of acquittal. It remains to be considered whether, if we do what we are asked to do, we can bring our action within the scope of our authority by regarding such an alteration as an amendment which may be just or proper. It has been argued strenuously before us (we have had the advantage of hearing the arguments of two of the most experienced Counsel at the Bar) that the word amendment' as used in this sub section confers a very wide power upon the Court and that we can without scruple: consider the provision, which allows us to make any amendment, that may be just or proper authority for expunging the remarks which exception is taken. We are unable to assept that view. We can read the word 'amendment' only to mean in this ennestion ameniment of an effective order of the Court below. Here the effective order is the order of acquittal. It is impossible for us to amend that on these applications. We are debarred from interfering in any way with the effective order, for the reason that we are not asked to question the asquittals. Thus there is nothing which we can amend in the effective orders. In support of the view which we take to the effect that the word amendment' means amendment of an effective order, we refer to a decision of a Bench of this Court, Ram Piyari v. Emperor (6), where a woman was convicted under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to a month's imprisonment. The matter came before the Additional Sessions Judge in revision. The parties then applied to compound the case. The case could not be compounded under rection 345 (5) of the Code of Oriminal Procedure, but when the matter came up to the High Court, it was held that the High Court had authority under section 423 (d), Oriminal Procedure Code, to amend the order of conviction by substituting for it an order that the offense should be compromised. Such an order, it is to be noted, does not have the effect of an acquittal. There is no provision in sub. sections (a), (b) and (c) for converting an order of conviction into an order permitting compromise. Sub section (d) clearly covered the case and gave authority for the action taken by way of amendment. The amendment was an amendment of the effective order of the Court below. Similarly in Abadi Begam v. Ali Husen (7), a Bench of this Court altered an order of the Sessions Judge in which he had directed certain property to be handed over to the Magistrate as unclaimed property by directing that the Magistrate should dispose of the property according to law. At that time the clause in question had not some into existence, but the view taken in that application was accepted by the Bench in Ram Piyari v. Emperor (6). There is also a decision of Stanley, C. J. in Gopi Nath v. Emperor (8), in which he upheld an order of the Sessions Judge directing a greater amount of property to be restored to the complainant than the amount restored by the Trial Court. He acted under the authority of section 423 (d). He appears to have considered that he was making a consequential or incidental order, but we should have considered that he was rather amending an effective order of the Court below.

All these decisions go to support the view, which we should have held in the absence of authority, that the word amendment' in this connection can only mean amendment of an effective order of the Court below, and that the existence of the provision sannot give us authority to amend the judgments of lower Courts by expanging passages, which do not commend themselves to us, in eases in which we have no authority to interfere with the effective orders passed by the Courts. We are unable to find that this Court has any authority in such circumstances. This view was taken by one of us in Criminal Reference Chattara v. Basdeo Sahai decided on 4th October 1920. If it be held that the grievances of persons who are unjustly criticised by Courts of law in circumstances which obviate the effective orders of the Courts coming before superior Courts in appeal or revision are so great as to require a special enactment for their protection, the matter is one for the consideration of the Legislature, but as the law stands we are satisfied that we have no We, therefore, dismiss these authority. applications.

"Account, mutual, open and current," meaning of -Test of mutuality-Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 85.

An account current is an open or running account batween two or more parties, or an account which contains items between the parties from which the balance due to one of them is or can be ascertained, from which it follows that such an account comes under the term of open account in so far as it is running, unsettled or unclosed. Mutual accounts are such as consist of reciprocity of dealings between the parties, and do not embrace those having items on one side only, though made up of debits and credits.

The test of mutuality is that the dealings between the parties should be such that the balance is sometimes in favour of one party and sometimes in favour of the other. An account which consists of entries of payments made by one party in reduction of a debt to another and of payments made by the latter on behalf of the former, is not a mutual account and, also, if the balance is sometimes in favour of the debtor but generally in favour of the banker the account is not a mutual one.

Where, therefore, an account does not indicate transactions creating independent obligations on both sides but there is sometimes a credit in favour of the defendant, and that only for a few days, the account is not a mutual account, and in a suit on such an account the plaintiff is not entitled to the benefit of Article 85 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, Pat GOPAL BAI U. -, nature of -Onus of proof.

In order to defeat a suit for possession of immoveable property by the plea of adverse possession, such possession must be adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor. But the onus of establishing adequacy, continuity and exclusiveness is upon the adverse possessor. When the holder of title proves that he, too, has been execcising during the currency of his title various acts of possession, then the quality of these acts, even although they might have failed to constitute adverse possession as against another, may be abundantly sufficient to destroy that adequacy and interrupt that exclusiveness and continuity which is demanded from any person challenging by possession the title which he holds. Partition-Possession held under mistake-Permissive possession—Restoration.

Permissive possession does not rest barely on an expressed agreeement by means of which one party permits another to take possession of his property. It is a question of legal inference from the circum-

Where on partition being effected between coparceners each by mistake gets into possession of certain plots which have been allotted to the other. and such possession continues even after the mistake is discovered, each must be deemed to hold possession of the plots with equal consciousness that he is entitled to hold possession of them so long as the other party holds possession of his plots, in other words, each holds in lieu of what the other holds, and each is liable to restore the plots which he holds as soon as the other party delivers the plots which that party holds in lieu of the former.

The possession held under such conditions is lacking in the permanent presence of the essential element animus domini in the conception of juristic possession. A person who has acquired possession

precaris is not deemed to have juristic possession. He is liable to be condemned to deliver up such possession to his opponent as soon as the latter is ready and willing to restore what he holds to the other. The possessory relation in such circumstances is imperfect. It is vitiated by the duty to restore and must, therefore, be deemed as equivalent to permissive possession.

In such a case, where the parties hold possession of the wrong plots in ignorance of the title of the other party, then both must be held to be labouring under a mistake of fact and when restoration of one party takes place to his original position he cannot recover from the other without surrendering the benefit which he derived under the mistaken act. This principle of equity is not limited only to cases of agreements, but extends even to acts committed under a common mistake of fact. O MAQBUL AHMAD v. FARHAT ALI, 8 O. L. J. 546: 4 U. P. L. B. (J. Where in a suit for profits it appears that there has been an alteration in the Revenue Record prior to the institution of the suit, but made during the period for which profits are claimed the duty of the Court trying the suit is to consider the order by which the alteration was made and give effect to the intention of the said order. If, for instance, a plaintiff was the recorded proprietor of a certain share in a mahal during the first year of the period in respect of which profits were claimed, and it were shown that after the close of that year he had been recorded as proprietor of a less share only upon a finding that he had transferred his interest in the remaining share after the close of the first year in suit, then the duty of the Court would be to give effect to the entries year by year, calculating the profits for each year on the basis of the record as it stood in respect of the said year in the revenue papers.

Although generally the interpretation of arbitration clauses is for the arbitrator, yet when a Court is asked to file an award, it must determine whether the document propounded as such is the production of an arbitration tribunal duly constituted under the terms of a contract or agreement binding upon both parties.

In a contract of sale there were two clauses, one providing that the parties would refer their disputes to arbitration, the other that no claim or dispute of any sort was to be recognised unless made within a certain specified period. In course of time the sellers claiming damages for breach of contract referred the matter to arbitration, but did so after the period specified had expired. The buyers raised objection but the arbitrator gave the award holding that the second clause referred to disputes raised by the buyers only and had nothing to do with any claim for damages by the sellers. On an application to file the award the buyers contended that the award was without Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 13 (1), 14-Arbitration-Reception of evidence in absence of party affected thereby, propriety of-Principle of justice - Irregularity of procedure -Misconduct - Award, when should be remitted and when set aside.

Where the arbitrators in a case do not decide a substantial question arising between the parties to the arbitration in the presence of both the parties and arrive at an ex parte decision in the presence of

Whether an arbitration is conducted on the footing that it is a mercantile or a legal arbitration, the first principles of justice must be equally applied in every case. One of these elementary principles is that an arbitrator must not receive information from one side which is not disclosed to the other, whether the information is given orally or in the shape of documents

. In arbitration proceedings both sides must be heard, and each in the presence of the other; however immaterial the arbitrator may deem a point, he should be very careful not to examine a party or a witness upon it, except in the presence of the opponent.

It is both an unwise and unsafe proceeding for an arbitrator to take proof in the absence of either

If irregularities in procedure are proved which amount to no proper hearing of the matters in dispute that would be misconduct sufficient to vitiate the award, without any imputation on the honesty or impartiality of the arbitrator.

The Court may remit an award when the arbitrator has been guilty of misconduct in a technical sense, that is, if the misconduct is of such a nature as does not disqualify him from acting or render it impossible for the Court to trust him If the arbitrator is guilty of fraud or partiality or such like misconduct, as would justify his removal, the

Court will not remit the award. But where the arbitrator has merely failed to exercise all his powers or has improperly exercised a discretion, such as, hearing witnesses or consulting documents in the absence of the parties, and this has happened in spite of a complete absence of dishonest motive the Court will not hesitate to remit the award to the arbitrator instead of setting it aside.

An arbitrator is the Judge chosen by the parties, he has a wide measure of discretion as to the manner in which the proceedings are to be conducted and a due knowledge of the whole case is to be brought to his mind. His award will not be set aside merely because the Court differs in opinion from him upon the merits of the dispute submitted for his decision. C HARI SINGH NEHAL CHAND v. -S. 19-Stay of suit-Action not relating to matters submitted to arbitration.

Before an order can be made to stay a suit under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act, it must be established that the suit has been instituted in respect of a matter agreed to be referred to arbitrarion.

A Court will refuse a stay, where the action commenced relates to matters outside the submission. C JNANENDRA KRISHNA BOSE V SINCLAIR MURRAY & Co., 34 C L. J. 173

--- Sch. I, Cl. 3, meaning of-Accard made three months after notice but within three months

An award made three months after the date of a notice calling on the arbitrators to act but within three months from the day when they actually entered on the reference and heard the evidence is within the time mentioned in Schedule I, clause 3 of the Arbitration Act and is consequently valid.

The provisions "entering on the reference" and "having been called upon to act by notice in writing" in clause 8 of Schedule I to the Arbitration Act are alternative in this sense that where no reference is entered upon at all, then the time runs from the notice calling upon the arbitrators to act. But, on the other hand, even although the arbitrators may be called upon to act by notice if they enter upon the reference, they have three months from that moment for making their award and for enlarging the time for making the award if the circumstances at the reference satisfy them that they cannot complete the award within three months. In the case of a personal action for a debt, limitation merely bars the plaintiff from having the particular remedy by way of suit and does not extinguish the debt.

Therefore, if an Attorney has any form of lien upon property in respect of his bills of costs, he can exercise that lien notwithstanding that, by the terms of the Limitation Act, he could not bring a suit.

The bar of limitation applies to a claim of setoff by a defendant as if he were bringing an independent suit of his own but where he is defending himself by way of set-off, if his claim was not barred at the time of the issue of the plaint, he may prosecute a set-off even though the time may have elapsed before his filing, say, a written statement claiming the set-off. C NARENDRA LAL v.

The expression "after the time of settlement" in section 37 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act does not mean "after the time of the Fermanent Settlement of 1793." Sch. III, Art. I (a), applicability of -Suit to eject tenant of private land -Non-occupacny tenancy, creation of.

Article 1 (a) of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act, does not apply to suits to eject persons who are not in law non-occupancy tenants.

The right of a non-occupancy tenant can only be acquired under Chapter VI of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and as that Chapter does not apply to private (ziraat) lands, no such right can be acquired in such lands.

Therefore, Article I (a) of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act would not apply to a suit by landholder for possession brought on expiry of lease of private ziraat land.

The mere fact that a person has been for a term a tenant of private ziraat land, and has not been a raivat holding at a fixed rate, or an occupancy tenant, does not raise any presumption that he has acquired the status or the rights of a non-occupancy tenant. The explanation to section 64, Civil Procedure Code, gives no priority to claims under section 72, Civil Procedure Code, apart from the attachment in connection with which they are made and under which they are enforceable, so that a claim to rateable distribution made in connection with an attachment ceases to be enforceable under it when the attachment is withdrawn.

It is necessary that limitation should be pleaded in all cases in which the suit is alleged to be barred. But particularly this is so where the bar is alleged under some special law.

The general rule is that points of limitation should not be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal where they involve a decision upon questions of fact.

Points of limitation should not be decided against the parties unless attention has been drawn to the question of limitation and an opportunity given them to meet it on the evidence.

Civil Procedure Code-1903-contd.

Where limitation has not been pleaded and where no issue has been raised, the Court cannot make any assumptions with regard to it. If limitation is urged as a bar the facts on which it is barred must be proved after an issue has been framed.

The mere fact that a book was not referred to in the lower Court, may not of itself be a good objection in appeal. If, however, the book was used to establish the existence of facts which the appellant had no opportunity of meeting and which he desired to rebut, the admission of the book in the appellate stage might involve a remand. interpretation of Bona fide mistake Transposition from defendant to plaintiff Limitation Act (IX of 1808), s. 22-Addition of new party.

The words of clause (1) to Order I, rule 10 of the Civil Procedure Code "where a suit has been instituted in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff" are comprehensive enough to include cases where the original plaintiff has no cause of action and their interpretation must not be restricted to cases where the plaintiff has some right to sue.

A certain firm was adjudicated insolvent and their estate was vosted in the Official Receiver. Prior to their insolvency the firm had entered into contracts with various merchants for the sale and purchase of different commodities. Merchants were alleged to have committed breach and were alleged to be liable for damages to the firm. The Official Receiver sold by public auction the "outstandings due and payable to the estate of the insolvents" inclusive of the claims of damages. Plaintiffs purchased these rights and got a duly stamped assignment of these rights and sued the merchants within three years. It was pleaded that the assignment was wholly illegal and void so far as it involved a transfer of "a right to sue for damages" and the suits were not maintainable. Plaintiffs applied three years after the accruing of the cause of action for transposition of the Official Beceiver who was one of the defendants from the category of the defendants to that of the plaintiff:

Held, that us the suit was instituted in the name of the wrong plaintiff through a bona fide mistake of law and although the plaintiff had no cause of action, the Court could, under Order I, rule 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, transpose the Official

The estate of a Hindu widow is not a life-estate. She is a proprietor of the estate with a right of alienation subject to certain qualifications. Each alienation by the widow in the exercise of that right must be judged by the circumstances in which it is made.

An alienation by a Hindu widow of her estate or a portion of the estate is not void ab initio but is only voidable if it transgresses the limitations imposed by the Hindu Law on the power of alienation, The death of the alienor does not necessarily render the alienation inoperative. The death of the alienor widow only enlarges the reversioner's right of barely challenging the alienation into a right of entering into possession of the property covered by the particular alienation. His right to challenge the validity of the alienation is, therefore, a permanent factor of his title to the property which developes from a bare spes successionis into a vested interest as an effect caused by the death of the widow. Further, as the validity or otherwise of each alienation depends upon the circumstances in which it is made and, as these circumstances vary with each alienation, it follows that the reversioner's right to challenge the validity of one alienation is different from his right of impeaching the validity of a separate and independent alienation, though both the rights may arise out of the one and the same title. Again, he has a right of election; he may choose to challenge one alienation and assent to another, or he may challenge both or assent to both. He may exercise his right of election in regard to one alienation at one time and in regard to another alienation at another time.

Therefore, a reversioner has a separate cause of action in respect of each alienation made by the widow, and a suit to recover property comprised in one alienation is not barred by Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code by reason of a prior suit for the recovery of property comprised in another alienation. Appellate Court.

Where a defendant, against whom an ex parte decree has been passed, prefers an appeal against that decree, and appears in support of the appeal, the decree of the Appellate Court affirming that decree cannot be described as an ex parte decree of that Court.

The proper course for a defendant seeking to set aside an ex parte decree against which an appeal has been preferred, is to apply to the Appellate Court for an adjournment of the hearing of the appeal to enable him to apply before the first Court to set aside the decree.

The granting of a temporary injunction is a matter of discretion, albeit a judicial discretion. One of the principles the Court has to bear in mind is that it must first see that there is a bona fide contention between the parties and then, on which side, in the event of success, the balance of incovenience will lie if the injunction does not issue. The real point is not how the question should be decided at the hearing of the case, but whether there is a substantial question to be investigated and whether matters should not be preserved in status quo until that question can be finally decided.

Defendant obtained a decree for possession of a house. The execution of that decree was resisted by the plaintiff who objected that the house belonged to him. His objection was dismissed and he filed a suit for a declaration of his title. He also prayed for the issue of a temporary injunction prohibiting the execution of the decree for possession pending the decision of the suit:

Held, that if the plaintiff was evicted from the house, the suit for declaration, as framed, would probably be thrown out and that, therefore, the balance of convenience was in favour of the plaintiff, and that the injunction prayed for should be granted.

Plaintiff, who was the mortgagee of a plot of land, built a house on the plot under the terms of the mortgage deed. The plot was subsequently sold by the owner to the defendant. Plaintiff sued for possession of the plot by pre-emption. His suit was dismissed by the first Appellate Court and he preferred a second appeal to the High Court. Defendant in the meantime obtained a decree for redemption and wanted to pull down the house. Plaintiff applied to the High Court for a temporary injunction restraining the defendant from pulling down the house pending the decision of plaintiff's pre-emption appeal:

Held, that if the defendant were permitted to pull down the house, the plaintiff would be deprived of the very ground on which he based his preferential right of pre-emption and would thus suffer irreparable loss, and that, therefore, this was a fit case in which a temporary injunction should be granted. decree against sub-tenant for possession—Suit by landlord against tenant for possession and injunction not to execute decree—Temporary injunction, legality of—Proper remedy.

Plaintiff let a house to defendant on lease which expired on 30th June 1920; defendant sub-let the premises, and as he could not get possession from his sub-tenant he brought a suit and obtained a decree. Plaintiff then filed a suit against defendant claiming possession and that the decree obtained against the sub-tenant was not binding on him, and for an injunction against defendant not to take possession. After the suit was filed he applied for, and was granted a temporary injunction restraining defendant from executing his decree against the sub-tenant:

Held, that plaintiff's suit not being of the nature prescribed in either rule 1 or rule 2 of Order XXXIX of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court had no jurisdiction to restrain defendant from obtaining the benefit of his decree, which had nothing to do with plaintiff's claim, and that plaintiff's proper remedy was to ask for the appointment of a Receiver pending settlement of the dispute between himself and the defendant B NASARVA JI CAWASJI ARJANI U. But, where one of several defendants against whom a decree is passed has allowed the period for appealing to elapse, the rale does not revive his right simply because a codefendant has instituted an appeal against the plaintiff on entirely different grounds The same principle applies in the case of a respondent objector who does not file any appeal himself whose interests are identical with that of the appellant and who might, had he chosen, have joined in the appeal. Act (XXVI of 1891), s. 32—Sale of goods—Arbitration clause in indent—Suit on bills—Stay of suit.

The plaintiff firm after shipment of goods drew two bills of exchange against the defendant firm which the latter accepted but refused to pay on maturity. The plaintiff firm accordingly sued them and their claim was based, in the first instance, upon the accepted but unpaid bills, and, in the alternative, they sued for the price of the goods and

No special form of permission is required by paragraph '1, Schedule III, Civil Procedure Code, to enable a judgment-debtor to execute a mortgage of his immoveable property. It is sufficient that the Collector knows that the mortgage is being executed and that he does in substance sanctionits execution by an order in writing. Nor is it necessary under that paragraph that every detail of the transaction should be sanctioned by the Collector or even that there should be a separate permission in respect of each deed. All that is required is that the judgmentdebor should have his written permission to mortgage the property. The permission mentioned in the paragraph need not take the form of a certificate under Order XXI, rule 83, Civil Procedure Code, for this rule and paragraph 11 of Schedule III are two entirely independent provisions and there is no warrant for reading the former into the latter.

The provision contained in paragraph 11, Schedule III, Civil Procedure Code, makes it illegal for a Civil Court to issue process against the property during the period powers conferred by the Schedule are exercisable by the Collector, and a process which was illegal when it was issued cannot become effective when the Collector ceases to be in charge of the execution proceedings. to the Government and he shall remain in possession and enjoyment of the same generation after generation (naslan bad naslan, batnan bad batnan) and shall exercise all sorts of proprietary powers (akhtyarat bator malikana)." Held, that the above document created an absolute interest in the donee with this qualification that a liability to pay the annual jama of Rs. 102-2-0 was imposed on him, so that he became an under-proprietor of the lands as defined in section 8 8) of the Oudh Rent Act. Held, that inasmuch as the judgment contained no provision that in case of failure to pay, the decree final for foreclosure would stand, the decree must be treated as granting an extension of time and setting aside the final decree and that, therefore, the judgment-debtors were entitled to pay the decretal money at any time before an order absolute was passed

Held, that a c. i. f. contract being a contract for the sale of goods by tendering the shipping documents, and not a contract for the sale of documents relating to goods, the principal and substantial breach for which damages were awardable was the failure to ship the rice to Colombo, and B was entitled to be put in the same position that he would have been in, had the contract been duly performed, and the rice delivered to him on due date, and that the true measure of damages was the difference between the contract rate and the rate at which the rice could have been sold by him at Colombo had it been delivered on due date. In Matrimonial cases the parties should not be ordered to pay their own costs for, although a wife's defence fails, or her counter-charges break down, or she has been proved guilty of adultery. the husband has to pay her costs.

The policy of the Matrimonial Law in England, and it is the same among the Christians in India, has always demanded that the husband shall be responsible for his wife's costs. A DWYER v. DWYER

Under section 45 of the Criminal Procedure Code every Mukaddam and Kotwar is bound to communicate forthwith to the nearest Station House Officer or Magistrate the occurrence in and near the village of any sudden or unnatural death or any death under any suspicious circumstances.

However unnatural, in the ordinary sense of the word, the cause of a death might be, it would not come within the meaning of the word 'unnatural' as used in section 4) of the Criminal Procedure Code so as to require to be reported immodiately unless it occurred fairly soon after the cause.

Criminal Procedure Code-contd.

The guilt of an accused should not be inferred from the omission by the accused of an available true and complete defence and substitution for it of unsustainable falsehoods. It is the duty of a Magistrate to find out whether an accused person is guilty or innocent, not merely to decide whether the pleas he chooses to put forward are sound or not.

Intention necessarily implies a mens rea, a consciousness of doing wrong. A Mukkaddam or Kotwar cannot be convicted under section 45 of the Criminal Procedure Code for an omission to make a report of a sudden accident or suspicious death if he honestly believes that there was no necessity for him to make the report and the view held by him is a reasonable view.

A nominal penalty of a pie only need be imposed if the accused is guilty of nothing more than a slight error of judgment which had no harmful consequences whatsoever if in such a case the responsible authorities choose to prosecute and the Magistrate is bound to convict when the offence is proved. District Magistrate, powers of - High Court, power of, to interfere.

The provisions of section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code do not confer upon a District Magistrate either an appellate or revisional jurisdiction in respect of orders passed under section 107 binding down persons to keep the peace. The section merely empowers a District Magistrate to cancel a bond for any sufficient reason, and confers no power on him to set aside a proceeding under section 107, even though the Subordinate Magistrate had acted without jurisdiction.

A District Magistrate issued an order to the public under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code for prevention of a public nuisance in a certain locality within his jurisdiction. The order had not the desired effect, as the nuisance was repeated, with the result that the Police challaned the accused and others before the City Magistrate, for an offence under section 291 of the Penal Code. The case was not proceeded with, but after three or four adjournments, the Public Prosecutor, under instructions from the District Magistrate, withdrew it under section 494 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and, armed with a fresh sanction from him, filed a fresh complaint on the same facts before another Magistrate under sections 183 and 290 of the Penal

Held, that as the withdrawal of the charge under section 291 of the Penal Code amounted to an acquittal under section 494 (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code, that acquittal operated as a bar under section 403 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code to subsequent proceedings under sections 188 and 290 of the Penal Code, as in the trial under section 291 of the latter Code, the accused could have been convicted under section 188 thereof, though not under section 291, and that, therefore, he could not be tried again on the same facts for any other offence of which he might have been convicted under section 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code though not charged with it.

The expression 'competent to try" in clause (4) of section 403 of the Oriminal Procedure Code refers to the character and status of the Tribunal when it refers to the competency to try the offence.

The term "competent jurisdiction" in section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code refers to the character and the status of the Court which has decided the case.

The restriction imposed by section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code, not to reverse or alter a finding or order or sentence on the gound of any absence of sanction unless it has occasioned a failure of justice, clearly indicates that a Court may be of competent jurisdiction to try a case in the absence of sanction; and, therefore, a sanction is not a condition of the competency of the Tribunal, but only a condition precedent for the institution of proceedings before a Tribunal.

Section 537 only cures the want of sanction in those cases which are covered by section 95 of the Criminal Procedure Code: the absence of sanction required by any other provision of the law cannot be remedied,

Although in a report to the High Court under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, a Sessions Judge does not recommend that the proceedings against the accused be quashed, yet, as a consequence of the report, the facts of the case are brought to the knowledge of the High Court, that Court has jurisdiction under section 449 to stop further proceedings, if it is satisfied that they are barred. Where a person makes an application under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code alleging that he is in possession of the land in question, it is the duty of the Magistrate to decide whether or not he is or has been recently in actual passession. The mere fact that the revenue records show that the holding is joint is not sufficient to stop the enquiry contemplated by section 145 of the Code. In proceedings under this section it is incumbent on the Magistrate to examine the parties and to take. evidence.

Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, applies to a case where the dispute is between co-sharers, each claiming to be in possession of the disputed land to the exclusion of the others; sub-section (b) does not, render the section inapplicable to a case in which the parties are jointly entitled to the land in question.

Subsequently three more persons came up and joined two of the thieves in beating the companions of the deceased and thereby committed riot:

Held, (1) that the riot did not form part of the same transaction with the theft and the murder, and could not be tried jointly with those two

(2) that the four persons who had gone to commit theft were prepared to use force in the event of any interference with them, and that the fatal assault on the deceased was made simply because he and his companions had prevented the thieves from taking away their booty;

(3) that the two acts were connected together by proximity of time, community of criminal intent and the relation of cause and effect, and they con-

Gonds of Bhagi in Bhandra District— Guardianship of minor's property - Step-brother or mother Rule of decision in absence of custom.

As regards guardianship, the Raj Goud family of Zemindars of the Shikmi Zemindari of Bhagi in the Bhandra District is not governed by the Hindu law, and, in the absence of proof of any custom, a question of guardianship in that family must be decided according to justice, equity and good conscience.

here certain minors of a Gond family with their mother are living jointly with their step-brother, who manages the whole estate, and is regarded by the family and all the world as the natural and rightful guardian of the minor's property, he must, according to equity and justice, be treated to be, as against the mother, a guardian both de facto and de jure, more so if the personal law of practically the whole population amidst which the family resides recognises a step-brother as the natural and rightful guardian in presence of the mother. —Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLV, 11 Consent order—Finality.

It is the duty of a Court to avoid such a construction of a decree as must in future result in multiplicity of suits between the parties in respect of a matter which has been finally settled.

A taluq lar executed a Will, under which he devised his estate to his nephew, and by the same Will he granted a maintenance allowance of Rs. 500 per mensem to his wife. By a subsequent codicil he granted another sum of Rs 500 per mensem to his wife The lady later on brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge to enforce her right to the annuities against the legatee. She not only claimed the arrears of maintenance but also asked for relief as to her right for the same in future and paid Courtfees both under clause (i) and clause (ii) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act. The Subordinate Judge held that she was entitled to an allowance of Rs - 0 per mensem, under the Will and that she was entitled to nothing under the codicil appeal, the 'udicial 'ommissioner's Court decreed her claim "for a declaration that she is entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 1,000 per mensem out of which half will be recoverable from the talugdars and the other half from the non-taluquari property, if any." On a further appeal, their Lordships of the Privy Council upheld this decree and observed as follows: "The respondent's Counsel expressed a fear that the declaration granted was insufficient. It does not so seem to their Lordships. It is a corollary of the declaration granted that any income which has since the death been received from the nontaluquari estato will be liable as well as the future income to pay the extra 500 rupees, including arrears, from the death up to the date of the declaration ":

Held, that the decree was not merely declaratory of the lidy's right to maintenance but that it empowered her to recover that maintenance from the taluquari and non-taluquari properties to the ex out to which they were respectively liable.

In transmitting an order of His ajesty in Council to the Court below for execution under Order XLV, rule 5, Civil Procedure code, a High Court is perfectly competent to give directions to the lower Court for the payment of the money only in the event of a sufficient security being filed by the decree-holder.

Ambiguity—Patent or latent-Extrinsic evidence -

Where in a grant of land there is a repugnancy between the terms of the grant and any plan or diagram the general rule is that the former will prevail. But this is subject to the qualification that where the plan or boundary is a part and parcel of the description itself, the general rule ceases to apply.

The principle that when an instrument contains an ambiguity, evidence of user under it may be given in order to show the sense in which the parties used the language employed, applies to a modern as well as to an ancient instrument, and where the ambiguity is patent as well as where it

Where a deed of conveyance of a house contained an ambiguity, in respect of the description of the property conveyed of such a nature that one portion of the description referred to the entire house and another portion referred only to a portion of the house, and both read together did not apply correctly either to the whole house or to a portion of it:

Held, that the case was covered by the provisions of section 37 of the Evidence Act and that extrinsic evidence was admissible for the purpose of solving the question whether by the description of the property taken as a whole the intention was to convey the house in its entirety or only a portion of it.

In a partition among certain brothers of a Dayabhaga Hindu family and their mother, some of the brothers separated and the rest continued joint with their mother. Subsequently a partition suit was fought out among the latter. The suit was compromised and a consent decree passed according to which the brothers who had previously separated relinquished in favour of the brothers suing for partition any rights they might acquire in the share of the mother at her death. - Mortgage by father-Suit by mortgagee -Sons not joined - Mortgage decree against father -Suit by sons to set aside decree Want of legal necessity and antecedent debt-Pleas available to plaintiffx-Burden of proof.

In a suit by sons to set aside a mortgage-decree passed against their father in respect of joint family property including their share in it in a suit to which they were not impleaded as parties, it is open to them to plead that part of the debt secured by the mortgage was not for legal necessity and the balance was not advanced for the satisfaction of an antecedent debt

Per Hallijaz, A J. C .- The decision in Motiram v. Asaram (Ramgopal), 53 IND. CAS 76; 6 N 1, R 61, is correct and the plaintiffs in a suit to impeach a mortgage-decree passed in a suit against their father to which they were not impleaded as parties are entitled to advance the plea that the debt was not for legal necessity, nor was it an antecedent

The doctrine of reasonable satisfaction after due enquiry as to the propriety of an alienation of joint family property by the manager of the family must apply just as much to an antecedent debt of the father as to family necessities or pressure on the estate Per Kotwal, A. J. C .- In a suit by sons for a declaration that the mortgage-decree passed against their father in suit to which they were not parties is not binding as against their share in the joint family property as the mortgage was not for legal necessity or for antecedent debts. they are entitled to challenge the decree on grounds personal to themselves and it is open to them to have the question tried whether the mortgage executed by the father was binding on him.

In such a suit the onus is on the defendant who seeks to enforce the mortgage either on the ground of legal necessity or on the ground of its being for an antecedent debt.

Per Dhobley, A J. C. - The rights of co-parceners in a Hindu family consisting of a father and his son do not differ from those of a co-parcener of a like family consisting of undivided brothers The son occupies the same position and possesses the same right against his father in respect of the ancestral property, as brothers have against each other in a joint family.

It has been a settled law in Central Provinces and Berar that an alienation for value by a member of a joint Hindu family holds good to the extent

No single co-parcener can alienate anything beyond his own share in the joint property, father being no exception to it When, however, a single co-parc ner alienates the joint family property for necessary family purposes the alienation is binding upon the other members and upon the whole property covered by the alienation

In a suit brought on a mortgage executed by the father, the son can call upon the mortgagee to show that the mortgage was for one of the two purposes either for legal necessity or for the satisfaction of an antecedent debt. The son's position is not injuri usly affected by the mortgagee's omission to join him as a party to his mortgage suit and by the son being thus compelled to bring a separate suit for protecting his own interests.

In a suit brought by a person to avoid a mortgage-decree passed in a suit to which he was not joined as a party he is not confined to the plea that the debt was borrowed for immoral purposes but he can plead that there was no legal necessity for the loan or that no portion of it was an autecedent debt

A loan made to the father on the occasion of a grant by him of the mortgage on the family estate is not antecedent debt and the mortgage so created is not binding on the son's share in the property.

The sale or charge by a father of joint family property in order to be binding on the son's shares should be made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate.

The maxim that everybody is presumed to know law and that its ignorance is no excuse cannot be applied when it has to be decided whether a certain act was or was not bona fide N DHUDABAI v.

NABAIN - Mortgage to pay off prior mortgage of date when son not born-Antecedent debt - Legal necessity.

A mortgage effected by a Hindu father to pay off a prior mortgage of a date when a son was not born to him is an antecedent debt for which the father can validly alienate family property, and no question of legal necessity arises for the validity of such a debt.

Pe Walsh, J. In an old transaction the failure on the part of a creditor to prove every pie raised by the debtor and expended for family necessity does not constitute a sufficient ground in law for interfering with the transaction even pro tanto. A SURAJ PRASAD V MAKHAN LAL, 20 A. L J. 236 131

- Partition, suit for, by purchaser of son's share-Mother, whether entitled to share-Stridhan received from husband or tather-in-law, whether should be deducted - Individual member, right of

A Hindu mother cannot compel a partition so long as the sons remain united, but if a partition does take place between the sons, she is entitled to a share equal to that of a son in the co-percenary property, and she is entitled to a similar share on a partition between the sons and the purchaser of the interest of one or more of them.

If the mother has received stridhan from her husband or father-in-law, its value should be deducted from her share, but the deduction to be allowed does not include stridhan received from the family of the father of the lady

A member of a joint Hindu family cannot, by alienation of his interest, prejudice the position of another member, because no owner of property is competent as a general rule, to convey to any person a higher right than what he himself possesses JOGOBONDHU PAL E. A lease of acres of land was evidenced by a rent-note of 1-21, which provided for the payment of Rs 40 a year as rent and if the rent was not paid, the lessee was to be at liberty to remove the structures which he might have placed upon the property. The lessee sub-let the property in 87 , INNN and INCO and the lessors never raised any objection :

Held, that the lease was a permanent lease which could only be terminated by non-payment of rent

Although the manager of a temple property for the time being has no power to make a permanent alienation of the property in the absence of proved necessity for the alienation, yet, if there is a long lapse of time between the alienation and the challenge of its validity, that is a circumstance which enables the Court to assume that the original grant was made in exercise of that extended power.

Where, therefore, a lease made by a grantee of property for a deity is questioned after 00 years, when every party to the original transaction has passed away and it becomes completely impossible to ascertain what were the circumstances which caused the original grant to be made, the assumption is, on the principle of securing as far as possible

 Widow — Alienation — Necessity — Future maintenance.

A widow is not always bound to sell exactly for the amount for which there is legal necessity

A Court must see in each case of an alienation by a widow whether having regard to the circumstances the alienation is a proper one.

The rule that a widow is not justified in alienating her husband's estate for future maintenance is not an inflexible one what is to be seen is whether in the particular case the widow has dealt fairly towards the expectant heir.

Where, in order to save the property from being sold by auction at an under-value, the widow sells it privately and pays off the decretal amount and some other debts and manages to save a part of the consideration for her future maintenance, the transaction must be upheld as an act of good management and prudence

A ryot in a zemindari relinquished his holding to the zemindar subject to a mortgage which he had oreated. The relinquishment was not made in the presence of witnesses as provided in section 12 of the Rent Recovery Act, but the zemindar accepted the relinquishment. Thereafter the mortgagee sued the mortgager's heirs for enforcement of his mortgage without impleading the zemindar as a party and obtained a decree for sale. The holding was put up for sale and purchased by the plaintiff's assignor. The plaintiff, on being obstructed by the zemindar while attempting to take possession, sued the latter for presession:

Held, (1) that the morigage suit was misconceived as the zemindar, who was entitled to redeem

(2) that the decree for sale in the mortgage suit and the sale in execution did not bind the zemindar and that the plaintiff's assigner not having obtained title to the Kudivaram right by his purchase, neither he nor his assignee could maintain the present suit for possession.

Madras Estates Land Act-concid,

Per Sadasira Aiyar, J.—A mere relinquishment by the tenant to the landlord cannot put an end to the mortgage already created by the tenant so as to prejudice the mortgagee's rights.

The term 'abancoument' denotes an unilateral act which does not necessarily imply that the act has been, or has to be, brought to the notice of any other person whereas an act of 'relinquishment' or 'surrender' implies that the act is brought to the notice of the landlord.

Per Napicr, J.—Relinquishment, acceptance and abandonment operate to terminate the estate of a tenant. The Kudivaram right is in abeyance until it comes into existence again by the admission of a new ryot and it continues in abeyance as long as the landlord does, in accordance with law, treat the

The words 'shall hold it as a landholder' in section 8 of the Estates Land Act do not necessarily imply that the land remains rooti land, and surrender is not an operation by which the entire interests become united 'otherwise.' Merger - Mukarrari lease - Patni lease - Both to different members of same family - Intention

Merger is not a thing which occurs ipso jure upon the acquisition of what, for the sake of a just generalisation, may be called the superior with the inferior right. There may be many reasons conveyancing reasons, reasons arising out of the object of the acquisition of the one right being merely for a temporary purpose, family reasons and others—in the course of which the expediency of avoiding the coalescence of interest and preserving the separation of title may be apparent. In short, the question to be settled in the application of the doctrine of merger is, was such a coalescence of right meant to be accomplished as to extinguish that separation of title which the records contain?

Where a mukarrari lease is granted in favour of certain members of a joint Hindu family, and later on a patni lease is granted of the same lands in favour of certain other members of the same family and upon the documents and accounts it is plain that the two are kept alive there is no merger.

The plaintiff after having obtained a decree in a suit for recovery of a lease-hold Colliery, claimed mesne profits and damages for malicious or negligent injury to the Colliery from the judgment-debtor After the passing of the decree in favour of the decree holder the judgment debtor's Solicitor had written to the decree-holder's Attorney offering to deliver possession of the mine and requesting the decree-holder to take steps to obtain possession as early as possible Notice was given by this letter that in case of neglect the Colliery with its machinery and accessories would remain at the decree-holder's risk and the judgment debtor stopped working the mine The decree-holder, however, had taken no steps to obtain possession till the following year:

Held, that the decree-holder was not entitled, in respect of the period after notice, to damages in the nature of mesne profits, that as the judgment-debtor had stopped working the mine the coal which the judgment-debtor might have got was still there and belonged to the decree-holder and that the question, therefore, whether under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code the omission to give notice of relinquishment through the Court under Order XX, rule 2 1 (c) (iii, Civil Procedure Code, left the judgment-debtor liable for mesne profits did not arise

The definition of mesne profits in section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, includes profits which the defendant "might with ordinary diligence have received" But mesne profits are in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case

For the purpose of ascertaining meane profits mining differs from agricultural operations on the surface.

The proof of the execution of a mortgage with reference to the provisions of section 68 of the Evidence Act and its validity with reference to the 'provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act are two different things. Therefore, where in a suit upon a mortgage bond the defendant admits the execution of the bond but raises the defence that the bond should not be regarded as a mortgage-bond, the plaintiff, although exempted from calling any attesting witness under section 68 of the Evidence Act by reason of the provisions of section 70 of the said Act, is still bound to show that the document was executed in the presence of attesting witnesses as required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.

A mortgage-deed provided for the payment of costs with interest of re-building the mortgaged house in case the mortgagee chose to re-build it. Shortly after the execution of the mortgage, the mortgagors vacated the mortgaged house at the request of the mortgagee, as the latter wanted to pull it down and re-build it. The mortgagee then pulled down the house and constructed a doublestoried building in its stead. Subsequently, the mortgagors sold the house to the plaintiff, and in the sale-deed it was specifically stated that the vendee was to redeem the mortgage and a specific sum was left in deposit with him for the purpose, This sum was to include the principal and interest as well as any amount spent by the mortgagee and interest thereon, and the vendee undertook to be responsible for any sum in excess of the sum left in his hands. Where a mortgage decree directs that the available proceeds of the sale to be held thereunder be paid in satisfaction of the decretal debt, but that if the amount due is not satisfied by the sale of the mortgaged properties, the balance be realised from the other property and person of the mortgagor, the period of limitation applicable runs not from the date of the sale of the mortgaged properties, but from the date of the decree as fixed by Order XX, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code.

A debt barred by the Statute of Limitation is not provable in bankruptcy proceeding. But the bar of time ceases to run (or to further run) after adjudication—as the effect of the bankruptcy is to vest the property of the bankrupt in the trustee for the benefit of the creditors, and all personal remedies against the bankrupt are also thereafter stayed.

Mortgage-Sult-Mortgage, denial of, by mortgager and stranger—Recital as to payment of consideration—Burden of proof—Question of onus of proof, when immaterial—Consideration recited not paid in full—Validity of bond, if affected—Parda-nashin lady, dealings with—Principles applicable—Alteration of document after execution, effect of—Material alteration, what is—Court's decision not to rest on mere suspicion—Execution purchaser—Property purchased subject to mortgage—Mortgage invalid—Benefit, by whom taken.

If an action to enforce a mortgage security is contested by the mortgagor and execution is admitted by or proved against him, the onus lies upon him to prove that the recital as to the payment of consideration for the deed which he executed is untrue. When, however, the claim is contested by a stranger who denies that the bond was executed and also asserts that there was no consideration for the mortgage, the onus is upon the mortgagee to prove his case.

The question of onus of proof arises only where there is no evidence one way or the other which will enable the Judge to come to a conclusion upon the question of fact to be determined; but where evidence has been adduced by both the parties and the relevant facts are before the Court, the question of burden of proof becomes immaterial and importance should not be attached to the question on whom the initial onus lay, in such circumstances, the question of the burden of proof is really not pertinent.

Though there may be ground for suspicion, though the conduct of the parties may engender doubt, the Court's decision must rest not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony.

The validity of a bond is not affected by the fact that the consideration recited was not paid in full; the bond is operative to the extent of the sum actually advanced.

The Court when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a parda-nashin lady must satisfy itself upon the evidence, first, that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorised by her, with a full understanding of what she was about to do; secondly, that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered, and, thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter. These principles fall broadly into two groups, namely, first, cases where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character or in some relation of personal confidence; and, secondly, cases where the person who seeks to enforce the deed was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arm's length. In the former class of cases, the Court will act with great caution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted; in the latter class of cases, the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsically. The Court must have regard to the intellectual attainments of the lady concerned and will naturally be disinclined to set aside the deed where she is proved to have been of business habits, to have been literate and to have possessed a capacity to judge for herself.

Either party to a document may show that there was in fact no consideration though consideration was recited therein or that the consideration was in reality different from what was stated in the deed.

The addition to a mortgage-bond after execution and attestation, of anything perfectly immaterial does not affect the liability of the parties, and where the alteration is an immaterial one, it does not vitiate the instrument, even though made by a party thereto.

What alteration is immaterial must depend upon the nature of the instrument as also upon the nature of the change.

The insertion of a schedule to a mortgage-bond, setting out the details of the consideration mentioned in the body of the bond does not constitute a material alteration as it does not vary the meaning of the instrument or change the rights or interests, duties or obligations of the parties in any essential particular.

If a mortgage notified at the time of an execution sale turns out to be invalid, the benefit is taken by the purchaser, and the judgment debtor is not entitled to claim from him a refund of the amount alleged to have been due on the mortgage; and the purchaser is free to contest the reality or validity of the mortgage when he is attacked by the mortgage. Muhammadan Law-Dower-Widow in possession of husband's cetate-Lien for unpaid dower-Gift - Possession, when not necessary-Mushaa, doctrine of, applicability of-Deed for maintenance-Life-interest.

Under the Muhammadan Law if a widow has obtained possession of her husband's property lawfully and peaceably, without force or fraud, she has a lien for her unpaid dower and it is not necessary that her possession should be the result of any agreement or consent of her husband or his heirs.

Under the Muhammadan Law, in case of a registered deed of gift executed by a donor in favour of his minor children under his own guardianship, delivery of possession is not absolutely essential. An unequivocal declaration that the donor has ceased to hold the property as owner is sufficient.

The doctrine of mushaa should be confined within the narrowest limits. Any defect due to mushaa is cured by taking possession of the property by the donees in definite shares.

Where a transaction is carried out openly and publicly and everything is done which ordinarily would be done to give effect to it, it certainly lies on the plaintiffs to show that the transaction was other than appeared on the face of it and was really intended to cover a fraudulent motive. The fact that shortly after a murder a person is found to be in possession of ornaments belonging to the murdered person, creates a very grave suspicion that he was concerned in the murder.

Where, however, the ornaments are not produced until nearly two months after the murder, during most of which period the accused was detained by the Police, and any one could have placed the ornaments where they were found, the suspicion is not nearly so strong.

In order to justify an inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. Notice-Knowledge-Constructive notice-Notice by title papers in one transaction, whether notice in independent transaction.

The conception of notice was introduced into law and the rules concerning it were established from considerations of policy and expediency based upon the common experience of mankind.

Notice, even when actual is not necessarily equivalent to knowledge, but the same effects must be attributed to it which would naturally flow from knowledge.

Whenever a party has obtained a full knowledge, although not in accordance with the rules which define the nature of notice and regulate the mode of its being given and received there is no longer any need of invoking the legal conception of notice, the rules concerning it no longer apply, the very fact for which it is intended as a substitute has been more accurately accomplished in another manner.

Notice to a purchaser by his title papers in one transaction will not be notice to him in an independent subsequent transaction, in which the instruments containing the recitals are not necessary to his title but he is charged constructively with notice, merely of that which affects the purchase of the property in the chain of title of which the paper forms a necessary link. Consequently, when one is purchasing a particular piece of real estate, and his title-deeds recite a charge upon, or equitable interest in another piece in favour of a third party, such recitals would not affect him with notice of such charge or interest in the event of his subsequent purchase from the holder of the legal title to the other property.

If there is a mutual mistake in a mortgage in the description of property and the same mistake is re-produced in the decree passed in a suit upon the mortgage, equity may go back to the original transaction and re-form both the mortgage and the decree so as to make them conform to the intention of

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

—Lathi blow in a melee—Natural and probable consequences—Fracture of skull—Common intention—Guilt of all taking part—Actual consequences also probable and natural—Person retiring from the assault after first blow—Intention—Guilt—Right of private defence—Defence of master—Assault by Mahar tenant on Rajput Zemindar—Assault by followers of Zemindars whether under grave and sudden provocation.

Having regard to the great frequency with which a lathi, used in a melee, lights on the head even though not specially aimed at it, and the still higher percentage of cases in which a blow on the head with a lathi results in the death of the victim from a fractured skull, it would be contradictory to say that a person taking part in an assault with lathis does intend to break the victim's arm or leg but does not intend to break his skull, an injury which is undoubtedly sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death.

In deciding what are the natural and probable consequences of an act, it must be presumed that every actual consequence is a natural and probable consequence unless and until the contrary is affirmatively shown.

If a man strikes another with a light stick and then retires from the assault before the general assault begins and the lathis of others begin their work he can be said to have taken no part in the common intention of others.

Under section 100 and section 96 of the Indian Penal Code an accused cannot be considered to have committed any offence, even in intentionally killing a person, while acting in his right of private defence if he has kept within the limits prescribed by section 99 of the Code, i. e, if the assault could not be prevented by anything short of killing.

If some persons were acting in the exercise of their right to defend their master against what was certainly a murderous assault, and, with such care and attention as was humanly possible at the moment and in the circumstances, believing that they could not protect their master from that assault otherwise than by striking the deceased with lathis, even at the imminent risk of hitting and cracking his skull, their acts amply satisfy the conditions required to bring them within the terms of the second Exception to the definition of murder in section 300 of the Indian Penal Code.

An assault by a Mahar tenant on a Rajput Zemindar, even if it had not been likely to result in anything worse than grievous hurt, would undoubtedly give very grave provocation to the Zemindar's followers, quite sufficient to deprive ordinary men of their self-control and if they suddenly and immediately assault the tenant it must be held that they acted while they were still under the full influence of the passion engendered by the pro-Vocation. The agreement went on to provide that, "if any of the contracting parties or their descendants break the contract the parties would have to revert to their oliginal half and balf share in the village land." The plaintiff now sued to recover the 1/6th share on the ground that defendant had for some years ceased to pay the dues which he had undertaken to pay. particular description of traffic; section 109 of the Act contemplates such reservation for possible and actual passengers.

The Traffic Working Orders of a Railway Company required that the reservation of a compartment of a lailway carriage for a class should be effected by affixing to both sides of the compartment, a printed card, signed or initialled by the Station Master, in a space provided for the purpose; notwithstanding these orders, the reservation of a compartment of a Third Class Railway Carriage was effected by affixing to the compartment, under the orders of the Station Master, two slips of paper bearing the words "Feserved for Europeans and Anglo-Indians", and initialled by the Ticket Examiner, and the question was whether the reservation was in contravention of the rules of the Railway, so as to render immune from prosecution any person not of the class for whom the compartment was reserved who entered the compartment:

Held, that the reservation was not in contravention of the rules of the Bailway, and any person entering such compartment who was not of the class for which it had been reserved, and refusing to leave it when requested to do so, rendered himself liable to prosecution under section 109 of the Railways Act. Accused, a passenger by Railway train, complained to the Station Staff that the compartment in which he was travelling contained more than the maximum number of passengers allowed by the rules made under section 63 of the Railways Act, but his complaint was unheeded: after the train left the station, he felt a sensation of suffocation and pulled the communicating chain and stopped the train, in order to complain to the guard. He was convicted under section 108 of the Act for having, without reasonable and sufficient cause, pulled the communicating chain and so stopped the train:

Held, that, no hard and fast rule could be laid down as to what would constitute reasonable and sufficient cause, that each case depended upon its own circumstances, and that under the circumstances of the present case the accused was justified in pulling the communicating chain and stopping the train inasmuch as he had the right to have the compartment vacated so as to reduce the number of passengers therein to the prescribed limit. Act (II of 1901), ss 5°, 11:9—Ejectment suit— Question of proprietary title referred to Civil Court— Question already determined by Revenue Court— Jurisdiction of Civil Court.

The decision of a nevenue Court does not operate as res judicata in a civil suit unless the case comes within the purview of sections 199 to 201 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Therefore, in matters outside the purview of those sections, when a decree of a Revenue Court is pleaded as bar to a civil suit, there is no question of res judicata, but simply whether the point before the Civil Court has been decided by a Rent Court under its exclusive jurisdiction in such a manner as prevents the Civil Court having jurisdiction to decide it and if it is not so decided it is not open to a Civil Court to refuse to determine the point.

The defendant sued plaintiff for declaration that he was the proprietor of the plot in question and that the latter was his tenant. The plaintiff asserted his own proprietary title. The suit was decreed. Subsequently the defendant sued to eject the plaintiff. The plaintiff again asserted proprietary title, and was referred to a Civil Court under section 190 of the Agra Tenancy Act. He brought this suit accordingly but the Civil Court considering it barred under the provisions of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code refused to entertain it:

Parganas Sonthal Settlement Regulation (III of 1872), sq. 5, 6-Sonthal Parganas Settlement (Amendment) Regulation (III of 1918), amending s. 5-Amendment, effect of - Sonthal Parganas - Settlement - Jurisdic. tion -Interest-Limitation Act (IX of 1908), 88: 2, 14-Defendant, meaning of-Suit against Mitak. shara family - New born son implended - Defendant, new, whether introduced-Hindu Law-Antecedent debt, dectrine of -Applicability as against collaterals.

The effect of the amendment of section 5 of Southal Parganas Settlement Regulation III of 1874 by Sonthal Parganas Settlement (Amendment) Regulation III of 1913, is to exclude the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to try cases relating to land in the Sonthal Parganas only during such period as that land should be under settlement, the period being reckaned from the time when the land is notified as being under settlement to the time when the settlement is notified as completed.

The operation of section 6 of Sonthal Pargunas Settlement Regulation III of 1872, unlike section 5, is not limited to the time during which a settlement is going on, nor is the section confined to the Courts locally situated in the Sonthal Par-All Courts wherever situated who have jurisdiction to decide cases within the Southal Parganas, when exercising that jurisdiction, must observe the two rules relating to usury contained in that section and refuse to decree an amount of total interest in excess of the original debt or loan, that is to say, in no case can interest be decreed in excess of the amount actually advanced, after crediting interest, if any, already paid.

Every person who acquires an interest by devolution or otherwise in the subject-matter of litigation previously vested in another which renders him liable to be impleaded as a defendant derives his liability to be sued from that person within the meaning of section 2 of the Limitation Act

In the case of a new born son in a Mitakshara family, the person or persons through whom, for the purposes of section 2 of the Limitation Act, he derives the liability to be impleaded as a defendant, are the members of the family in whom the property which the son acquires by birth was previously vested.

A suit to enforce a mortgage against certain members of a joint Hindu family was dismissed for want of jurisdiction The plaintiff sued again in the proper Court also joining as defendants persons who had in the meantime been born in the family and sought to exclude the period during which he had been prosecuting the previous suit from the operation of limitation under section 14 of the Limitation Act. The defendants objected that the section was not applicable as the defendants in the two suits were not the same :-

Held, that the section was applicable as under section 2 of the Limitation Act no new defendaut was introduced.

Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation - concld.

The doctrine of antecedent debt applies where the debt is one incurred in substance and in reality antecedently, whether or not the debt so incurred was secured by a charge on the family property.

Although the doctrine of antecedent debt applies only as against the sons and grandsons of the debtor and does not apply so as to permit of a valid charge on the property where the interests of collaterals are involved, nevertheless where all the adult members of a family are themselves the debtors and the only other persons interested are their minor sons and grandsons, the doctrine is clearly applicable. Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 3, 54. 55 - "Obligation," meaning of -Injunction to restrain cutting of sacred tree-Prevention of breach of merely moral or religious obligation.

The first defendant having obtained a decree against the second defendant for the removal of a nim tree which had penetrated its roots into the adjoining wall of the house of the former, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit for permanent injunction to restrain the execution of the decree on the allegation that the tree was a sacred one, and that its removal would be an invasion of their religion and would offend their religious sentiments':

Held, that the injunction could granted as the refusal to grant the perpetual injunction would not lead to the breach of an obligation, that is, of a duty enforceable by law which the plaintiffs could compel the defendants to perform, within the meaning of section 54 of

The word 'obligation,' in section 54 of the Specific Relief Act may be taken to be a tie or bond which constrains a person to do or suffer something, it implies a right in another person to which it is correlated, and it 'restricts the freedom of the obligee with reference to definite acts and forbearances, but in order that it may be enforced by a Court it must be a legal obligation, and not merely moral, social or religious. The special provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, relating to the attestation of mortgages, and of the Evidence Act, relating to the method of proof of mortgages, are not applicable to charges,

A suit to enforce a payment of money under a document which creates a charge on immovable property is governed by Article 132 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act even though the document is a contract to indemnify, or a contract in writing registered such as would ordinarily be governed by Articles 86 and 116 respectively. Statute, interpretation of.

An anomalous mortgage enabling a mortgagee, after a lapse of time and in the absence of redemption, to enter and take the rents in satisfaction of the interest will be perfectly valid if it does not also hinder an existing right to redeem. A provision hindering such an existing right is invalid and cannot be given effect to.

A mortgage for a term provided that, if the debt was not re-paid at the end of the term, the mortgagee would be entitled to enter into possession of the mortgaged property and continue in such possession for another period during which the right of the mortgagor to redeem was excluded. The debt not having been paid at the end of the term, the mortgagee instituted a suit for possession. The mortgagor resisted the suit in all the Courts unsuccessfully and then brought a suit for redemption:

Held, that the mortgagor had, under section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, a statutory right to redeem at the end of the term, even if the mortgage was one in which by section 98 the rights of the parties were to be determined by the contract

A notice by a landlord to his tenant unequivocally expressing the intention to determine the lease on the ground of forfeiture though inadequate under section 106 of the Act, is a sufficient compliance with section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Trial by Jury-Charge-Misdirection-Discrepancies and contradictions in evidence, how to be dealt with in charge-Duty of Judge.

In determining whether there has been misdirection to a jury, the charge must be judged as a whole, and it must be seen whether the case for both sides has been fairly put, so that the jury understood what they had to decide and come to a right decision.

In dealing with discrepancies and contradictions in the statements of prosecution witnesses in his charge, the Judge should draw attention to the more essential items, and the strongest argument advanced by the defence; merely referring the jury to the speech of the Pleader for the defence is not sufficient. Where in a trial by jury upon charges of rioting armed with deadly weapons and murder, it appears that the person whose death was caused was suffering from a disease which accelerated his death, and the injuries described in the medical evidence were in themselves not apparently sufficient to cause immediate death, it is the duty of the Judge in his charge to the jury, to place these facts before them, and to ask them whether they are satisfied that the accused, when attacking the deceased, knew or had reason to believe that the injuries caused were likely to cause death and whether it could be inferred that death was intended to be caused. An omission on the part of the Judge to do this, amounts to a misdirection to the jury. C AINUDDI CHOWKIDAR v. EMPEROR, 34 C. L. J. 515; 23 CR. L. J. 344

In a suit to enforce the agreement as a trust:

Held, that no trust was created yet and that there was nothing more than an agreement between the parties to allot the money by a proper deed of trust to be executed hereafter.

The doctrine of executory trusts is applicable to cases of trusts created for valuable consideration, and has no application to charitable trust where the beneficiaries are purely volunteers.

Though the Trusts Act does not apply to charities and no formalities are required by law to create it, still where it is intended to create a trust with reference to a particular property it is necessary that the language used should be clear enough to show a definite intention to create a trust by it and it should amount to a declaration which is or can be construed to be imperative. Where there has been a completed dedication, the fact that the details of the trust have not been settled by the dedicator will not affect the validity of the dedication. M Veneratachalapathi Iyer v. In the absence of a custom to the contrary, a lamburdar has no power, without the consent of his co-sharers, to grant a lease of co-parcenary land beyond such term as the circumstances of the particular year or season might require, but in circumstances of an exceptional nature a lambardar is justified in the exercise of his powers as a manager, charged with the collection of rents, to grant leases for a longer term to raise the largest income to the co-sharers on whose behalf he purports to act. WIII, construction of-Absolute devise to Hindu widow-"Malik," meaning of-Right of pre-emption given to heirs and co-sharers, whether restricts

A Hindu testator by his Will authorised his widow to adopt five sons in succession and provided that if a son were adopted, the widow and the son should take the estate in equal moieties as owners (malika) with full power of gift and sale to be exercised by each of them. There was a clause in the Will which ran as follows: -"If for any reason the adopted son or my said wife is required to sell any property left by me, he or she shall sell it to my heirs and co-sharers for proper price, that is to say, the highest price, offered by them, but if they refuse to purchase the property on paying the proper price, it may be sold to others." The next clause of the Will ran thus :- "If my said wife do not adopt any sons, then on my decease, my said wife would be the owner (malik) of all my property with power of gift and sale and shall be able to give and sell it accord. ing to the directions contained in the previous clause." The widow did not adopt any son and died having herself made a Will by which she dedicated the property to religious uses. In a suit for the construction of the Will of the husband:

Held, that the widow took an absolute estate in the property left by her husband, which was not cut down by the right of pre-emption given to the heirs

Per Richardson, J .- The word "malik" usually denotes an absolute owner.

Per Chaudhuri, J .- In all cases of gift by Will whether to male or to female, unless the instrument shows that a restricted interest was intended to be created, the legatee or the devisee must be entitled to the whole interest of the testator.

The word "malik" imports full proprietary rights unless there is something in the context to qualify it. The fact that the donee is a Hindu widow is not sufficient for that purpose. C SUDHAMANI DAS v. SUBAT LAL DAS, 25 O. W. N. 527

- Standard of proof-Suspicion-Consideration and analysis of positive evidence on record-Proof of handwriting—Comparison of signatures, value of.

In the case of a Will, reasonable, natural and proper in its terms, it is not in accordance with sound rules of construction to apply to it those canons which demand a rigorous scrutiny of documents of which the opposite can be said, namely, that they are unnatural, unreasonable or tipged with impropriety.

Wherever a Will is prepared under circumstances which raise a well-grounded suspicion that it does not express the mind of the testator, the Court ought not to pronounce in favour of it unless the suspicion is removed. But this suspicion must be one inherent in the transaction itself and not the doubt that may arise from a conflict of testimony which becomes apparent on an investigation of the transaction.

In order to prevail against clear and positive evidence the improbability in a Will must be clear and cogent and must approach very nearly to, if it does not altogether constitute, an impossibility.

A comparison of handwriting is at all times a mode of proof hazardous and inconclusive, and especially when it is made by one not conversant with the subject and without such guidance as might be derived from the arguments of Counsel and the evidence of experts.

Although from the dissimilarity of signatures a Court may legitimately draw the inference that a particular signature is not genuine because it varied from an admittedly genuine signature, yet resemblance of two signatures affords no safe foundation that one of them is genuine. C SAROJINI DASI v. HARIDAS GHOSH, 34 C. L. J. 373; 26 C. W. N. 113 774 Will-concld.

- Standard of proof to establish Will-Burden of proof - Attesting witnesses, production of-Appellate Court, duty of-Verdict of Judge trying

The standard of proof to establish a Will required by the Indian Statutes is that of the prudent man and not an absolute or conclusive one. The Evidence Act, while thus adopting the requirements of the prudent man as an appropriate concrete standard by which to measure proof, is, at the same time, expressed in terms, which allow full effect to be given to circumstances or conditions of probability or improbability, so that where forgery comes in question in a civil suit, the presumption against misconduct is not without its due weight as a circumstance of improbability, though the standard of proof to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt required in a criminal case may not be applicable.

The onus probandi lies in every case upon the party propounding a Will, to satisfy the conscience of the Court that the instrument propounded is the last Will of a free and capable testator; in other words, where a Will is prepared under circumstances which raise a well-grounded suspicion that it does not express the mind of the testator, the Court ought not to pronounce in favour of it unless the suspicion is removed. But the suspicion must be one inherent in the transaction itself and not the doubt that may arise from a conflict of testimony which becomes apparent on an investigation of the transaction.

Though it is desirable that all the attesting witnesses capable of being called should be examined to remove all suspicion of fraud, it is not absolutely necessary that where there are many attesting witnesses, the absence of every one not called should be specifically explained.

The verdict of a Judge trying the case should not be lightly disregarded by the Appellate Court where the issue is simple and straightforward and the only question is, which set of witnesses is tobe lelieved. But where the determination of the question of genuineness of a Will depends not merel upon the assertions of witnesses but upon surrour ing facts and circumstances whose existence is eit r admitted or indisputably proved, the judge tof the Trying Judge may be vitiated by his fai re to test the veracity of the witnesses by reference thereto. Two conflicting view-points have to be reconciled, namely, on the one hand, the undon sted duty of the Court of Appeal to review the recorded evidence and to draw its own inferences, and conclusions, and, on the other hand, the unquestionable weight which must be attached to the opinion of the Judge of the primary Court who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and noticing their look and manner.
